

BARE NAKED ISLAM

It isn't Islamophobia

When they really ARE trying to kill you.

Islamic Rape Jihad

Do you know me..?

I am a 12 year old girl from Norway, I was gang raped several times by four Muslims. The punishment from the court for this serious crime for three of them was community service, while the fourth was released.

This is how the body of a Swedish rape and murder victim was found. Even though immigrants in Denmark are strongly overrepresented as perpetrators of rape and other violent crime, the situation in Sweden is far worse. Sweden is the nr. 1 rape country in the world, only surpassed by Lesotho in Africa. Like in Norway, Denmark and other European countries, most of these rapes are done by immigrants, refugees, asylum seekers. But in Sweden they wisely don't keep statistics on ethnic backgrounds, and it is completely off limits to even discuss reality in this Socialist nightmare.

THE MOST OFFENSIVE THING ABOUT THIS CARTOON IS THAT IT IS ALL TRUE.

Europe turns a blind eye

To Muslim Pedophiles Posing As Refugees And Bringing Their Child Brides From Forced Marriages Into Europe?

Muslim Child brides from the Middle East are turning up in refugee centers in The Netherlands, and Dutch authorities are at a loss on how to deal with the problem. Although Dutch law doesn't allow girls to marry until 16, it also recognizes foreign marriages of younger girls if the marriage is legal in the bride and groom's country of origin. Social workers are faced with a horrifying dilemma: return girls as young as 13 to their middle-aged husbands and, in the process, turn a blind eye to what would be government-sanctioned child rape; or break up families?

Dutch politician Attje Kuiken is appalled, and wants the law updated to protect refugee child brides from what she sees as sexual abuse: "A 12-year-old girl with a 40-year-old-man – that is not a marriage, that is pedophilia. We're talking about really young children, girls 12, 13 years old who are victims of legal sexual abuse in their home countries."

Dutch immigration minister Klaas Dijkhoff is working on getting his country's immigration laws updated to only recognize foreign marriages if both partners are over the age of 18. In the meantime, child brides are proliferating among the migrants.

1 in 4 Swedish Women Will Be Raped by Muslims as Sexual Assaults Increase 500%

Sweden has imported huge numbers of Muslim immigrants with catastrophic effect. Sweden's population grew from 9 million to 9.5 million in the years 2004-2012, mainly due to immigration from "countries like Afghanistan, Iraq and Somalia". 16% of all newborns have mothers born in non-Western countries. Sweden now has the second highest number of rapes in the world, after South Africa, which at 53.2 per 100,000 is six times higher than the United States. Statistics now suggest that 1 out of every 4 Swedish women will be raped.

In 2003, Sweden's rape statistics were higher than average at 9.24, but in 2005 they shot up to 36.8 and by 2008 were up to 53.2. Now they are almost certainly even higher as Muslim immigrants continue forming a larger percentage of the population. With Muslims represented in as many as 77 percent of the rape cases and a major increase in rape cases paralleling a major increase in Muslim immigration, the wages of Muslim immigration are proving to be a sexual assault epidemic by a misogynistic ideology.

The statistics are skewed by urban centers where the Islamic colonists cluster. In Stockholm this summer there was an average of 5 rapes a day. Stockholm has gone from a Swedish city to a city that is one-third immigrant and is between a fifth and a quarter Muslim.

Dozens of Muslim men raped one 12-year-old schoolgirl, But only five have been jailed so far

At least five Muslim men have been sentenced to a combined 82 years for their roles in a child sex grooming ring in the picturesque market town of Aylesbury, Buckinghamshire in the South East of England.

The taxi drivers and market traders had been found guilty in July, but have now been sentenced for a range of crimes including rape of a child under 13 and child prostitution.

Although child 'A', who had been 12 and 13-years-old when she was abused told police she had been raped by at least 60 men, only 11 of the men have faced charges. The girl and a second, identified only as child 'B' had been given gifts by the men, including fast food, drugs, and inexpensive trinkets in return for sex and were passed around. The plight of the first girl was only flagged by authorities after she had given birth twice in two years and couldn't identify the fathers. She had been raped so frequently – daily – by different men, she had no way of telling.

During his sentencing, senior judge John Bevan QC said the race of the girls played a significant factor in why they had been picked for abuse by the men. He said that the Asian community looked after their own, while the native one failed to do so, remarking: "The combination of inadequate parenting leading to rebellious children lacking supervision provided an opportunity. If they pursued Asian underage girls, they would have paid a heavy price in their community."

Vikram Singh (45) drugged the girls and raped them, and has been identified as a ringleader. He was sentenced to 14 years.

Asif Hussain (33) of Milton Keynes was convicted of three counts of rape and jailed for 13 years. The court heard how he raped one of the girls in her home while she was still wearing her school uniform and attempted to sell her on to men who resembled "Osama Bin Laden."

Arshad Jani (33) was found guilty of rape and conspiracy to rape and jailed for 13 years. The court was told he had a wife and young family in Pakistan who he had been supporting with his earnings in Aylesbury.

Pakistani citizen Mohammed Imran (38) of Bradford was convicted of three counts of rape, one count of conspiracy to rape and one count of child prostitution. He will be jailed for 19 years and will face deportation upon his release.

Akbari Khan (36) of Aylesbury was found guilty of two counts of rape, administering a substance with intent, and conspiracy to rape and will be jailed for 16 years. Like Jani, he also has a young family.

Taimoor Khan (29) was sentenced to three years in prison for one count of sexual activity with a child.

The testimony of the girls makes shocking reading: Girl 'A' said in a police statement: "You get passed round. It wasn't particularly me looking for them. It was them looking for me. It's just that they pass your number around. Or you're with one of them and they invited three or four of their friends round and then you have to sleep with them."

"Because you're in their place and they're making your life a bit more exciting, so you do what they want. I just knew Asian men wanted to sleep with me. I didn't think they found me attractive. I was happy that I was wanted. I felt popular. Like they wanted me and I got a load of attention, that was it."

Girl B is now suing Buckinghamshire county council for neglect.

Harmohan Nangpal (41) of Langdale Drive, Hayes, is accused of one count of rape, and one count of sexual activity with a child.

Akbari Khan (36) of Mandeville Road, Aylesbury, denies two counts of rape, one count of sexual activity with a child, and one each of administering a substance with intent, conspiracy to rape, and conspiracy to commit sexual activity with a child.

Jerome Joe (35) of Pightle Crescent, Buckingham, is charged with one count of rape and a single count of sexual activity with a child.

Sajad Ali (34) of Brockhurst Road, Chesham, is charged with rape, sexual activity with a child and administering a substance.

Sohail Qamar (41) of St Anne's Road, Aylesbury, is accused of sexual activity with a child, two counts of rape, and assault occasioning actual bodily harm.

Faisal Iqbal (32) of Pixie Road, Aylesbury, is on trial accused of conspiracy to rape and conspiracy to commit sexual activity with a child.

Dutch authorities worry about child brides? or, is it just live babies that bother them? They of the red light district, sex shops, legal prostitution, government-subsidized sex services for the disabled, pre-abortion, legal euthanasia including of babies up to a year old (the so-called Groninger Protocol) without fear of judicial prosecution? Yes, the situation is deplorable and immoral, but how do you handle it? Mothers who are minors, in a new country, with a new language, limited education and skills... if you remove them from their "husbands", you wouldn't necessarily want to separate mother and child in a foster care situation, and, adoptions could be dicey on account of religion. Wow!

Muslim "refugees" bring pregnant little girls as "child brides" to Europe

This is what "European values" now look like

The millions of Muslim migrants invading Europe under the guise of refugees are making the abuse of children into the new normal. If you want to know where the Muslim sex grooming scandals of the UK in which thousands of young girls were raped come from, it's down to religion and culture.

And this is what Europe is importing via Religion of Peace:

Dutch asylum centers are reportedly housing 20 child brides aged between 13 and 15, while three a week on average are arriving to the country. The brides were granted legal permission to join their older partners after the country recognized marriages involving young teenagers if they are officially registered in their home country.

Yes, you read that correctly. It is true that the Netherlands have recognized child rape as a legal marriage if it's legal under Muslim law.

Outraged Dutch Labour MP Attje Kuiken said: "A 12-year-old girl with a 40-year-old man - that is not a marriage, that is abuse. We're talking about really young children, girls 12, 13 years old. I want to protect these children."

Child brides as young as 12 have been ordered to stay with the men they were forced to marry after European officials agreed to recognize the partnerships. It comes amid fears of a pedophilia epidemic inside European refugee camps after a pregnant 14-year-old girl went missing from a Dutch centre. Fatema Alkasem disappeared along with her 24-year-old husband in August and police are concerned the Syrian girl needs medical care.

This is not going over well among the native population. More than 36,000 people entered the Netherlands this year. Former prisons, empty government offices and sports halls are being hastily modified to accommodate the surge in numbers. Earlier this month, Finance Minister Jeroen Dijsselbloem announced that the treasury's original projection of $340 million to cover the cost of the new arrivals in 2015 was wildly understated. They are now looking at a bill of approximately $1.13 billion.

The anti-immigration Freedom Party is enjoying its highest ever poll rating. The Freedom Party's popularity is being partly attributed to Dutch concern about the continent's inability to manage the flow of new arrivals.

Europe is trashed with third world scum implementing Shari'a law, including child rape and marriages with children. Look at Canada's pro-Muslim Liberal Justin Trudeau. How did lying Muslim-loving Obama do it a second time? It tells you that voters have an affinity for the left. You are who you vote in and it seems that the more evidence mounts against accepting Muslims into our communities the more people want to embrace them. In the end the lying mainstream media are there constantly brainwashing people with false narratives.

Pedophilia and Pederasty are just two of the reasons Jewish neo-cons and secularists want to be rid of Christianity - because Christians fight against these abominations being accepted. Just look at the support the degenerate ☆ Roman Polanski got in Europe (and Hollywood) after drugging and having sex with a 13 year old girl.

From the Islamic point of view, it's all about building an army for the continuation of Jihad and the eventual conquest of the world. The sooner a young woman starts having babies, the more children she can have over the course of her reproductive life. With Muslims it's obviously just a numbers game. The more children, the more Muslims, and the more Muslims, the more warriors for all forms of Jihad. At the rate they are going, Muslims know they will be in the majority soon enough in Western Europe, and then they will be able to use the democratic ideals of the host cultures to defeat and destroy them. Once they are in the majority, Muslims will be able to impose Sharia law by the will of the majority, which will effectively eliminate the institution of democracy completely going forward. The only thing at all surprising about any of it is that the nations of Europe do not seem to be able to recognize what is happening to them.

I'm reminded of the caterpillar and parasitic wasp. The caterpillar is eaten from the inside out. In nature the wasp benefits humanity. Islam's benefits for humanity are non existent.

Guess what else Muslim 'refugees' are bringing into Germany

A Rape Epidemic.

Growing numbers of German women and very young girls across the country are being raped by Muslim immigrants. At this rate, Germany could by bypass Sweden as the Muslim rape capital of Europe. Not surprisingly, many of the rapes are being downplayed by German authorities and the national media, apparently to avoid fueling anti-Muslim immigrant sentiments.

Rapes of Muslim women and children in refugee centers is also rampant but who cares? Meanwhile, the raping of German women by asylum seekers is becoming commonplace. Following are a few select cases just from 2015:

On September 11th, a 16-year-old girl was raped by an unidentified "dark-skinned man speaking broken German" close to a refugee shelter in the Bavarian town of Mering. The attack occurred while the girl was walking home from the train station.

On August 13th, police arrested two Iraqi asylum seekers, aged 23 and 19, for raping an 18-year-old German woman behind a schoolyard in Hamm, a city in North Rhine-Westphalia.

On July 26th, a 14-year-old boy was sexually assaulted inside the bathroom of a regional train in Heilbronn, a city in southwestern Germany. Police are looking for a "dark skinned" man between the ages of 30 and 40 who has an "Arab appearance."

Also on July 26th, a 21-year-old Tunisian asylum seeker raped a 20-year-old woman in the Dornwaldsiedlung district of Karlsruhe. Police kept the crime secret until August 14th, when a local paper went public with the story.

On June 9th, two Somali asylum seekers, aged 20 and 18, were sentenced to seven-and-a-half years in prison for raping a 21-year-old German woman in Bad Kreuznach, a town in Rhineland-Palatinate, on 13 December 2014.

On June 5th, a 30-year-old Somali asylum seeker called "Ali S" was sentenced to four years and nine months in prison for attempting to rape a 20-year-old woman in Munich. Ali had previously served a seven-year sentence for rape, and had been out of prison for only five months before he attacked again. In an effort to protect the identity of Ali S, a Munich newspaper referred to him by the more politically correct "Joseph T."

On May 22nd, a 30-year-old Moroccan man was sentenced to four years and nine months in prison for attempting to rape a 55-year-old woman in Dresden.

On May 20th, a 25-year-old Senegalese asylum seeker was arrested after he attempted to rape a 21-year-old German woman at the Stachus, a large square in central Munich.

On April 16th, a 21-year-old asylum seeker from Iraq was sentenced to three years and ten months in prison for raping a 17-year-old girl at festival in the Bavarian town of Straubing in August 2014.

On April 7th, a 29-year-old asylum seeker was arrested for the attempted rape of a 14-year-old girl in the town of Alzenau.

On March 17th, two Afghan asylum seekers aged 19 and 20 were sentenced to five years in prison for the "particularly abhorrent" rape of a 21-year-old German woman in Kirchheim, a town near Stuttgart, on 17 August 2014.

On February 11th, a 28-year-old asylum seeker from Eritrea was sentenced to four years in prison for raping a 25-year-old German woman in Stralsund, along the Baltic Sea, in October 2014.

On February 1st, a 27-year-old asylum seeker from Somalia was arrested after attempting to rape women in the Bavarian town of Reisbach.

On January 16th, a 24-year-old Moroccan immigrant raped a 29-year-old woman in Dresden.

Dozens of other cases of rape and attempted rape — cases in which police are specifically looking for foreign perpetrators (German police often refer to them as Südländer, or "southerners") — remain unresolved. Following is a partial list just for August 2015:

On August 23rd, a "dark skinned" man attempted to rape a 35-year-old woman in Dortmund.

On August 17th, three male "southerners" attempted to rape a 42-year-old woman in Ansbach.

On August 16th, a male "southerner" raped a woman in Hanau.

On August 12th, a male "southerner" attempted to rape a 17-year-old woman in Hannover.

Also on August 12th, a male "southerner" exposed himself to a 31-year-old woman in Kassel. Police say a similar incident occurred in the same area on August 11th.

On August 10th, five men of "Turkish origin" attempted to rape a girl in Mönchengladbach.

Also on August 10th, a male "southerner" raped a 15-year-old girl in Rinteln.

On August 8th, a male "southerner" attempted to rape a 20-year-old woman in Siegen.

On August 3rd, a "North African" raped a seven-year-old girl in broad daylight in a park in Chemnitz, a city in eastern Germany.

On August 1st, a male "southerner" attempted to rape a 27-year-old woman in downtown Stuttgart.

Meanwhile, parents are being warned to look after their daughters. Police in the Bavarian town of Mering, where a 16-year-old-girl was raped on September 11th, have issued a warning to parents not to allow their children to go outside unaccompanied. They have also advised women not to walk to or from the train station alone because of its proximity to a refugee shelter.

The increase in sex crimes in Germany is being fueled by the preponderance of Muslim males among the mix of refugees/migrants entering the country.

In the Bavarian town of Pocking, administrators of the Wilhelm-Diess-Gymnasium have warned parents not to let their daughters wear revealing clothing in order to avoid "misunderstandings" with the 200 Muslim refugees housed in emergency accommodations in a building next to the school. The letter said:

"The Syrian citizens are mainly Muslim and speak Arabic. The refugees have their own culture. Because our school is directly next to where they are staying, modest clothing should be worn in order to avoid disagreements. Revealing tops or blouses, short shorts or miniskirts could lead to misunderstandings."

Clearly, the worst epidemic since the plague: These subhuman parasites, are postured to annihilate the entire free world. Indeed, this will be the battle of all battles, and nothing short of total victory is required to preserve our once-great European civilization. Good vs Evil, has never had a more profound significance. We must be steadfast and vigilant. We must defeat this Godless enemy, at all costs. I proudly wear my badge of Islamophobe! Death to Islam!

Germans and the rest of Europe don't have to worry about the invasion. They are being and will be bred out of existence. They will rape your women and girls until they give birth to only Muslims. The men of Europe better stand up or just put a gun in your mouths now and save us all the trouble of watching Europe die slowly. Its embarrassing and sad. Destroy your liberal leaders and throw out those that hate you but want to lead you.

This is disgusting - disgusting and real - I live in Ingolstadt and I see the malice and perversity of Muslims every day: they harass women, even little girls, they yell obscenities at us, at schools our daughters are insulted and bullied by Muslim boys and even girls! Muslim little girls are very mean to German girls. But the most sickening aspect of this is the fact that nothing seems to wake Germans from the sweet rotten unreality where many are living: many Germans are so intoxicated with guilt and self-hatred that feel we deserve pain and misery inflicted by Muslims and other third world races just because we are White and German and “privileged” and because Nazis were White and Germans too... to many stupid Germans irrational disliked for their own race, culture and ancestors have now become a mechanism for self-esteem and purity, to them being German or European is a crime for which one must spend their life kissing non-white asses.

ISIS Rapes Women Toward Allah

Women sold as slaves. Women beaten in the streets. Women raped for sport. Girls as young as 8 or 9 years old forced into marriages with strangers, and bound to sexual servitude. The reports of the atrocities perpetrated by the Islamic State against girls and women – most of them Yazidi – seem as unending as they are despicable and senseless. But the latest may yet be the most depraved: women and girls being raped repeatedly as a way to “make” them Muslim.

A new directive from ISIS’s self-appointed caliph, Abu Bakr Al-Baghdadi, instructs men to rape the women that they capture. A woman who is raped 10 times, it says, will then become a Muslim. That this represents an extraordinary manipulation of Islamic law, or Shari’a, seems to be of no concern to ISIS soldiers despite their professed devotion to upholding and imposing those very laws. And it presages even greater danger for the girls than the rape itself. One Yazidi woman, identified only as “Noor,” spoke of a soldier to whom she was enslaved raping her and then allowing 11 others to do the same, meaning that she was in fact twice raped after “becoming” Muslim. But a Muslim woman who is raped is guilty of adultery according to Shari’a, and is a dishonor to her family and her tribe. Their only redemption is to kill her – a so-called honor killing. Will this new directive then allow ISIS members to legitimize the murders of Yazidi women and young girls who – unlike Yazidi men – have largely been allowed to live so long as they remain concubines and slaves to ISIS warriors? or is it simply a new form of Islamic conquest, legitimizing rape while expanding the Muslim population? or something else?

Other victims have also said they were told their rapes were a form of worship, encouraged in the Qur’an. Indeed, in an extensive investigation, the New York Times described a “theology of rape,” in which militants often pray before molesting their victims. One victim, a 12-year-old Yazidi girl, told the Times: “He said that by raping me he is drawing closer to god.”

“Repeatedly,” the Times reports, “the ISIS leadership has emphasized a narrow and selective reading of the Qur’an and other religious rulings to not only justify violence, but also to elevate and celebrate each sexual assault as spiritually beneficial, even virtuous.” Even more shocking, the Times investigation shows, “child rape is explicitly condoned” by Islamic State leaders, who have victimized Yazidis more than other religious minorities, as Yazidis practice a non-Abrahamic religion that ISIS considers a form of devil worship. Such tactics might lead those otherwise repelled by the idea of raping helpless girls to believe that such depravities are not only sanctioned by their religion - but holy. And if raping a girl ten times will bring her to Islam, then indeed each rapist becomes, in this perverted vision, not her diabolus but her savior.

But it isn’t only non-Muslim women who are victimized. Similar tactics have emerged among Muslim communities in Libya, where, according to Britain’s Express, parents in the ISIS stronghold of Sarte are being forced to marry off their daughters to ISIS rebels or face public flogging or worse. In Derna, girls as young as 12 have also reportedly been married off, traded for a promise of protection to the family. Consequently, according to the Independent, “the number of underage girls forced to marry has increased 15 percent since an Islamic State local branch seized a large part of the coastal city” last October.

Many Western Muslims decry the rapes and forced marriages, arguing that, as Pakistani-American counterterrorism expert Farhana Qazi said: “Rape and any form of abuse is against the tenets and practice of Islam.” But others point to a legacy of enslavement in Islam, particularly during war, and note that there are even rules regarding the treatment of slaves and the taking of women as concubines outlined in the Qur’an. It is that legacy, they maintain, that ISIS leaders use to justify their actions as part of their revival of a true, “pure” Islam.

Such is the evil cunning of the Islamic State and its leadership: with a single weapon – rape – they penetrate not just the bodies of young women, but, too, the hearts and minds of men. Not only are 72 virgins waiting for you in Heaven, but if you join us, you can rape your way across the Levant. And with its powerful propaganda machines, it is possible that the “holy rape” fable could even help recruit more young Muslim women from the West, urging them to join the jihad in Syria and, in their already-distorted thinking, to give their bodies to the militants. It will make them “more holy.” It will bring the soldiers closer to Allah in their strife.

Should the propagandists of ISIS endure long enough, they can shape the ideas and visions of the next generation and the very depths of their inhumanity. It seems almost beyond the reach of Western, post-Enlightenment minds, a way of thinking we cannot begin to comprehend. How can we possibly begin to combat it, let alone to build a humane culture in its place? Frighteningly, Farhana Qazi says it may not even be possible. Yet somehow we will have to. Because each of these young women, these girls enslaved for sex, will soon become a mother. And what they teach their children – daughters as well as sons – will be left to their ISIS masters if we fail.

Mohammed Shafia became a jailhouse religious tyrant after killing three daughters and wife

Kingston Penitentiary was already a very scary place the day Mohammad Shafia walked into the joint. He was convicted for the 2009 murders of his three daughters and first wife in a barbaric “honour killing” in which the women were incapacitated and dumped into the Rideau Canal near Kingston. In Shafia’s twisted interpretation of Islam, his daughters were too Western, had brought shame upon the family and therefore had to die. It wasn’t long before he unleashed another reign of religious terror at the notorious slammer, a jailhouse insider revealed Monday.

Ottawa psychologist Robert Groves, testifying about prison Islamic radicalization before a Senate national security committee, described to the spellbound parliamentarians how Shafia used ultraradical Islam and old-fashioned big house bullying to control and intimidate about 25 other men.

Afghan Migrant Brutally Raped And Burnt To Death Young European Because She Wanted To Break Up

An Afghan migrant has been sentenced to life imprisonment in Finland for brutally murdering a teenage lover ten years his junior because she didn’t want to continue the relationship.

The 17-year-old Finnish girl had only dated Ramin Azimi for a month before she tried to end their relationship. The court heard how she had wanted to see another man, but Mr. Azimi demanded marriage and children of her. When she wouldn’t cooperate, Mr. Azimi attacked the young woman while she was out jogging.

Equipped with spare clothing, rope and gasoline, the Afghan asylum seeker raped his former lover in revenge for leaving him. Having completed this act, Mr. Azimi then tied the girl to a chair in an abandoned shed, poured petrol over her, and set her alight.

The body of the young woman was later discovered by dogs after her disappearance had been reported to police by her parents.

When arrested Mr. Azimi told police he had tried to commit suicide by burning himself, and his girlfriend had rushed to his aid. In doing so she herself was caught in the burning building but he escaped unharmed. The court rejected this version of events.

The prosecutor said Mr. Azimi killed because he was consumed with jealousy, and even said his struggles with obtaining Finnish citizenship had played a part in driving him to kill.

Judged sane by a court psychiatrist, the perpetrator — a long-time resident of Finland but without Finnish citizenship — has now been sentenced to life imprisonment for the sadistic killing.

Although this is his first criminal offence, he has not been averse to creating trouble. The court heard how he had recently knocked his own mother to the floor, fought with siblings, and punched a friend in the nose so “blood was pouring hard”, reports Italehti.fi.

Bizarrely, while Mr. Azimi was ordered to pay €60,000 to the parents of the deceased girl in compensation, he was ordered to pay an even larger amount — €69,000 — to the insurance company responsible for the building he burnt down with his victim inside it.

Showing a flair for sensitivity and good timing, just days after the rape and murder judgment was passed on asylum seeker Mr. Azimi, Finland’s immigration service made an announcement stating that neither murdering nor raping in Finland would block a migrant’s chances of being granted asylum.

Clarifying remarks by the Finnish prime minister on the subject, the immigration service director Esko Repo spoke out, remarking that while crimes committed abroad prior to arriving in Finland would be taken into account during the asylum decision process, ones perpetrated after arrival were not, reports Ilta Sanomat.

Cover-up: The Swedish Left’s Sacrifice of Women to Political Correctness

Female sacrifice hasn’t ended. It has just been transferred from the altars of pagan gods to that of political correctness, and the rending of bodies takes a back seat to the searing of souls.

If you had to pick a contender for rape capital of the world, Sweden wouldn’t likely come to mind. Yet it now has the second-highest “official” rape rate of any country. It’s 53.2 rapes per 100,000 inhabitants is five times the United States’ rate and is only surpassed by Lesotho, a tiny nation in the middle of southern Africa.

It wasn’t always this way. Once an extremely safe land, violent crime in Sweden has increased 300 percent since 1975. That year, write Scandinavian journalists Ingrid Carlqvist and Lars Hedegaard, “421 rapes were reported to the police; in 2014, it was 6,620. That is an increase of 1,472%.” Why is 1975 significant?

Because that’s the year the Swedish government decided to adopt an immigration regime that would transform Sweden into a “multicultural” country.

This is also significant because 77.6 percent of the country's rapists are identified as "foreigners" (and that's significant because in Sweden, "foreigner" is generally synonymous with "immigrant from Muslim country"). And even this likely understates the issue, since the Swedish government — in an effort to obscure the problem — records second-generation Muslim perpetrators simply as "Swedes."

Moreover, writes Carlqvist and Hedegaard, "A new trend reached Sweden with full force over the past few decades: gang rape — virtually unknown before in Swedish criminal history. The number of gang rapes increased spectacularly between 1995 and 2006. Since then no studies of them have been undertaken." The last line gets at a different trend: A refusal to investigate the nature of crime in Sweden for fear that the truth will contradict multiculturalist dogma. This is similar to Baltimore, Maryland, where violent crime is "down" — because the authorities have simply stopped arresting many criminals.

Carlqvist and Hedegaard then reported on a sexual assault that Sweden's public prosecutor called "the worst crime of rape in Swedish criminal history," a brutal 2012 gang rape of a 30-year-old woman by eight "foreign" men. The punishment? Seven of the perpetrators will likely serve just over 3.5 years in prison, Carlqvist and Hedegaard tell us (they provided no information on the eighth).

Yet, incredibly, this might be considered a firm hand in Sweden. The journalists also report, "In cases of gang rape, culprits and victims are most often young and in almost every case, the perpetrators are of immigrant background, mostly from Muslim countries. In an astounding number of cases, the Swedish courts have demonstrated sympathy for the rapists. Several times the courts have acquitted suspects who have claimed that the girl wanted sex with six, seven or eight men."

As an example, after the 2013 gang rape of a 15-year-old girl in a Stockholm suburb, a lower court convicted the six "foreign" perpetrators, but, write Carlqvist and Hedegaard, "the court of appeals acquitted them because no violence had occurred, and because the court determined that the girl 'had not been in a defenseless position.'"

Such rulings should raise eyebrows and ire anywhere, but they're especially profound in Sweden. A land of über-feminism, the nation's Left Party (its actual name) proposed in 2004 what was called the "Man Tax," a special levy on men to compensate society for the cost of "male violence." Some years before there was a story about another Swedish feminist crusade: an effort to compel boys and men to sit down while urinating (seriously), in the thinking that standing up during the act was symbolic of male dominance. Before you laugh, know that the urinals had been removed from one elementary school on this basis.

The point is that Sweden is a country where men are now often guilty until proven innocent — except in one situation. There is a politically correct hierarchy of "victim" groups, and, it appears, "Muslim" trumps "female." This explains why rape in Sweden is both exaggerated and covered up. As to the former, Carlqvist and Hedegaard cite the government's claim that "the law has been changed so that more sexual offences are now classed as rape" as a specious excuse for the climb in the rape rate. Yet in deference to feminism, Sweden did long ago expand the definition of rape beyond reason. This brings us to the cover-up: This policy change is used to explain away the Muslim factor in sexual attack, which finds its roots, says a critic, "in Islam's culture to rape and brutalize women who refuse to comply with Islamic teachings."

To illustrate the zeal for effecting the cover-up, note that this critic — a local Sweden Democrat Party politician named Michael Hess — was convicted of the hate-speech charge "denigration of ethnic groups" for making his claim. It didn't matter that he has lived in Muslim countries and that at his trial he presented evidence on the Sharia law position on rape; the court claimed, reports Dispatch International, "that the question of whether or not Michael Hess's pronouncement is true, or appeared to be true to Michael Hess, has no bearing on the case."

In fact, the truth seems very inconvenient for Sweden's multiculturalist program. So much so, that the nation's complicit media will tell bold-faced lies to advance it. For example, Carlqvist and Hedegaard point out that a brutal gang rape aboard a Finnish ferry this month was reported by the following newspapers thus:

- "Several Swedish Men Suspected of Rape on the Finland Ferry" (Dagens Nyheter).

- "Six Swedish Men Raped Woman in Cabin" (Aftonbladet).

- "Six Swedes Arrested for Rape on Ferry" (Expressen).

- "Eight Swedes Suspected of Rape on Ferry" (TT — the Swedish News Agency).

The problem? All the suspects were Muslim — and all were foreign nationals, having no Swedish citizenship. This didn't stop the media from turning them into "honorary Swedes," however.

Oh, when journalists from Aftonposten and Expressen were asked by Internet radio station Granskning Sverige about this blatantly dishonest reportage, they said it was "irrelevant" and that they were "offended" at the suggestion they had a responsibility to tell women the truth. As Carlqvist and Hedegaard wrote:

One journalist asked why that should be their responsibility.

"If the women knew, then perhaps they would have stayed away from these men and avoided being raped," said the reporter from Granskning Sverige. Whereupon the journalist slammed down the phone.

Perhaps, though, they fear going the way of Ingrid Carlqvist. She left Sweden some years ago. Why? Because when you oppose immigration in her nation, as she explained, others will "point at you and say you are a racist; then you will have no job, no career, you might lose your family. You will have no future."

And if she ever wants to come back, she may have to play by different rules. After all, as multiculturalist social engineer and Social Democrat politician Mona

Sahlin put it in 2001, "the Swedes must be integrated into the new Sweden; the old Sweden is never coming back."

Honour killing toll at least 15 in Canada in past two decades

If Peer Khairi (inset) is found guilty of murdering his wife in an honour killing, as alleged by prosecutors, it will make Randjida Khairi at least the 16th person to die in Canada since 1990 in an honour killing in which the perpetrator was convicted, according to my research. In three additional deaths, court proceedings are still underway, including two in 2011. I believe there may be many more Canadian homicide cases that were not recognized as honour killings. Khairi is accused of stabbing to death his wife Randjida in 2008 in Toronto, Ontario in a case with troubling parallels to the Shafia case. Peer Khairi, like Mohammad Shafia, is an Afghan immigrant who brought his family to Canada. His murder trial began 5 October 2012.

Khairi was unhappy with his life in Canada, his trial has heard. He fought with his daughter about her relationship with another Afghan immigrant and he feuded with his wife. He felt he was losing control of his family. Khairi wanted his daughter to follow custom and marry a cousin. She wanted to choose her own partner and her mother supported her, sparking bitter disagreement between the parents. According to evidence from the couple's daughter, provided at a previous court hearing, her mother was afraid of her husband and had talked of leaving him. She told a counselor at the Afghan Women's organization, two days before her death, that she wanted to live on her own. Crown prosecutors suggest that the man held his wife responsible for the disrespect he believed he faced at home and he lashed out at her violently, stabbing her in the chest and slashing her throat. Khairi has acknowledged inflicting the wounds but has pleaded not guilty to the charge of second-degree murder.

Khairi called emergency services after his wife was stabbed.

Seven women and young girls have been slain in cases that are confirmed or alleged honour killings in Canada since Randjida Khairi died in March 2008.

Amandeep Kaur Dhillon, 22, was stabbed to death in January 2009 by her father-in-law. Kamikar Singh Dhillon pleaded guilty to second-degree murder. He believed Amandeep was going to leave her husband and shame the family.

» Zainab Shafia, 19, her sisters Sahar, 17, and Geeti, 13 and their stepmother Rona, 50, were killed in June 2009. The parents of the girls, Mohammad Shafia and his wife Tooba and their eldest son Hamed, were each convicted of four counts of first-degree murder. Prosecutors established that Shafia was enraged that his daughters had shamed him by consorting with boys and adopting Western lifestyles. Rona, who was Shafia's first wife, had asked for a divorce and sided with the girls.

» In July 2011, Shaher Bano Shahdady, 21, was strangled in her Toronto apartment in an alleged honour killing. Her estranged husband is charged with first-degree murder.

» Ravinder Kaur Bhangu, 24, was hacked to death in July 2011 outside the newspaper office in Surrey, British Columbia, where she worked. Her husband, Sunny Bhangu, 26, is charged with first-degree murder. The victim's family in India allege she was killed because they did not comply with dowry demands.

In addition to the fifteen honour killings where convictions have been registered since 1990, there are an additional three victims who were injured in an attempted honour killing in 2007. In that case, a Toronto man, Selvanayagam Selladurai, used his minivan to run down his 16-year-old daughter, her boyfriend and his son in law, seriously injuring two of them including his daughter. He believed that his daughter had shamed him by dating a boy of a lower caste. He pleaded guilty to three counts of aggravated assault and was sentenced to five years in prison.

Although some politicians, social service and child protection agencies suggest that honour killings are a relatively new phenomenon that is not well understood, there are cases in Canada dating back nearly 60 years. In July 1954, an Italian immigrant, Annunziato Tripodi, strangled his wife to death because she had been unfaithful, became pregnant by another man and had an abortion. He told police and family later that he had to kill her to avenge his family honour. Tripodi was convicted of murder and he argued unsuccessfully, in an appeal that ended up at the Supreme Court of Canada, that he should be convicted only of manslaughter. Tripodi claimed that he killed his wife in a moment of passion, the result of sudden provocation when she admitted to having had an abortion. The provocation defence is an arcane concept in Canadian law (section 232) that often has been used by men to mitigate their responsibility for killing wives and girlfriends, typically in situations where the man found his partner with her lover. The section of law stipulates that:

Culpable homicide that otherwise would be murder may be reduced to manslaughter if the person who committed it did so in the heat of passion caused by sudden provocation.

Another honour killer in Canada, Dilbag Singh Nahar, tried in 2002 to use the defence of provocation after murdering his wife, Kanwaljeet Kaur. Like Tripodi 48 years earlier, he failed. The couple, Sikhs from India who came to Canada, were wed in 1998 in a marriage arranged by their families while she was just 17. Three years later, Nahar stabbed his wife in the chest and neck with a kitchen knife. He claimed he did not remember inflicting the fatal wounds. Nahar acknowledged the marriage was tumultuous and he had often tried to convince his wife to stop smoking, drinking and socializing with other men, acts that he considered forbidden by their strict Sikh upbringing. During one of these confrontations, on May 19, 2001, Nahar said his wife again refused his entreaties, telling him: “You can’t stop me.” During his trial, Nahar testified that: “My brain became numb and I became like blind.” It was during this “blindness” that he stabbed her. Nahar’s provocation argument was summarized in the decision of the judge:

Central to the case is evidence as to the shared expectations among the Sikh community, and the Indo-Canadian community at large, as to the proper conduct of a married woman and as to the importance attached to these expectations. The case for the defence, reduced to its simplest terms, is that the words and actions of Mrs. Nahar, just before she was killed, amounted to a sudden and unexpected insult of such a nature as to be sufficient to deprive an ordinary person of the power of self control and that Mr. Nahar acted on that insult on the sudden and before there was time for his passion to cool.

The judge ruled that an ordinary man would not have been “raised up to a heat of passion” even if the provocation was as Nahar described it. Nahar was convicted of second-degree murder.

13 men guilty of enforced prostitution & rape of vulnerable girls in Bristol

With second group of convictions, story can be told of the sexual abuse of teens – some in local authority care – often for money

Thirteen men, all of Somali origin, have been convicted of the systematic sexual abuse of vulnerable girls as young as 13 in Bristol and officers are investigating claims against 49 other suspects.

The victims, some of whom were in local authority care, were groomed and passed around by their abusers – often for money – and assaulted in homes, parks and a hotel.

One of the girls was raped at age 13 on the same night by three different men, including a stranger, and thought her life would be in danger if she went to the police.

Another girl was sexually exploited after a local authority outside Bristol set her up alone in a flat at the age of 16 in a deprived inner-city neighbourhood although she had been described as having the emotional development of a three-year-old.

Within hours of arriving, she was spotted by drug dealers who set up a base in her new home and forced her to work as a prostitute. The abuse continued for months even after she told care workers about what was happening; the girl’s 14-year-old sister was subsequently raped during a visit.

A serious case review will look at the case and examine whether more should have been done to protect the girls. Ten girls came forward to make allegations about the 13 men but Avon and Somerset police said they were actively pursuing nine other investigations across the force area, involving suspects from various communities and ethnic backgrounds. The Guardian has learned that 49 suspects and 48 victims are involved in these investigations.

Detectives expressed concerns that hotels were being used for exploitative sex parties and the police have worked with the Premier Inn chain because one of the most savage attacks took place at one of its hotels.

Avon and Somerset police have said the case has similarities with large-scale child exploitation cases in places such as Oxford and Rochdale, where men of Asian heritage have been found guilty of abuse. But this the first time members of the Somali community have been found guilty of such crimes.

Police said they were aware that the case could prompt hate attacks.

Six of the men, most of whom are in their early 20s, have begun jail terms for offences including rape, paying a child for sex and arranging or facilitating payments for the sexual offences of a child. Another seven – one of whom appeared in both trials – were convicted this week of offences including rape, causing or inciting child prostitution, sexual acts with children and trafficking.

Some of the offenders were members of a drugs gang that sold heroin and cocaine in Bristol. Others were well-educated men with good prospects. The lifting of reporting restrictions on Thursday means that the story can be told for the first time.

The case has caused huge concern in Bristol. Teachers have been briefed and some teachers at inner-city schools have claimed it is not uncommon for schoolgirls to boast about being paid for sex.

It has also sent shockwaves through the Somali community in Bristol. Muna Abdi, chair of the Bristol Somali Forum, said the men had committed “evil acts” that the Muslim community utterly condemned.

A joint statement from the Bristol Somali forum and the Somali Resource Centre said: “The Somali community is law-abiding and values law. The shock of this case, like a thunderbolt, has struck at the heart of our proud and law-abiding community in a way that is impossible to describe.”

Children’s charity Barnardo’s continues to care for some of the victims. Hugh Sherriffe, director for Barnardo’s in the south-west and Midlands, said the case was the “tip of the iceberg” and such abuse was going on across the UK and demanded more efforts to stop it.

Detectives began investigating last year after the 13-year-old was raped by three men on the same night just before Christmas 2012.

A group of young men had gathered in a room at a Premier Inn in Bristol. One of them, a 22-year-old drug dealer called Said Zakaria – also known by his street name Target – was tasked with the job of finding girls to “party with”. Zakaria went off to pick up the 13-year-old, who can only be identified as Complainant One (C1).

Rather than bringing her straight to the hotel, Zakaria first dropped her off an inner city flat where she was raped by a stranger. He took her on to the Premier Inn where he raped her twice and another man raped her once.

By the time C1 was picked up by Zakaria, she was accustomed to abuse, having been groomed by one of Zakaria’s friends, Mohamed Jumale, since the age of 11. She lost her virginity with him under a bridge on a cycle way and he coerced her into having sex with other men, telling her this was his culture.

After police began investigating, other teenagers came forward to report that they had been abused by young men of Somali origin in flats, parks, and in the disabled toilets in a shopping centre.

In January last year – the month after the Premier Inn attack – a 16-year-old girl who can only be identified as Victim A was placed by a local authority outside the area alone in a Bristol flat. She was said to be scared of the dark and craved company. However, she was given a little supervision but left to cope alone for 22 hours a day.

One of the first people she met when she ventured out alone was Zakaria. She asked him if he could get her “weed” and they began chatting. Within hours, the drugs gang Zakaria was part of was setting up shop in A’s flat.

Over the next months they used it as a safe house to stash and prepare heroin and cocaine before selling it.

They also began to sexually abuse A. One gang member acted as her pimp. He would stand guard as she had sex with men. Together they could make £300 a day from five or six clients. Victim A grew fond of some of her abusers (her social worker compared it to a kidnap victim falling for her kidnappers). She said she was glad to please the men and felt “part of something”.

In May last year, her 14-year-old sister, who was also in care and had run away, was raped at the flat. Police arrived looking for her and heard a knocking from a cupboard under the sink. The girl was dressed only in her underwear. She was crying and make-up was running down her face. “They made me do stuff,” she said.

17 Year Finnish Girl Burned Alive By Illegal Alien From Afghanistan 1 Dec 2015

A 26 year old illegal alien from Afghanistan was convicted of the rape and torture/murder of a seventeen year old girl in Finland.

Ramin Azimin came to Finland as an illegal alien. Under EU law, Finland had to grant him temporary residency and consider him for asylum. His application for asylum was rejected in early 2014, but he was never deported.

Seventeen year old Jonna briefly dated Azimin. After she she broke up with him, he kidnapped her. He tied her up. Placed her in an outhouse, and set it on fire. Azimin told the court that Jonna had committed suicide by burning herself alive.

He was convicted on November 26th, and sentenced to what is referred to as “life in prison” under Finnish law. However, “life in prison” only means you will spend the rest of your life on parole. Azimin will be eligible for parole in 12 years. Most people convicted of murder in Finland are paroled within 15 years.

Facebook censors story about ‘refugee’ raping Swedish woman

Facebook has sensationally banned a story about a ‘refugee’ raping a Swedish woman in line with the company’s new policy to censor anti-migrant posts deemed to be “xenophobic”.

The Infowars story, which explained how a north African migrant who participated in the gang rape of a woman in Stockholm got off without charge, was posted on Facebook yesterday but disappeared from the website within hours.

A query of the URL on Facebook’s ‘Debugger’ website reveals that, “this link is blocked.” Any attempt to post the link on Facebook results in failure.

Apparently, Facebook feels it is more important to control the narrative on the migrant crisis than to defend rape victims.

The company’s policy was leaked during a conversation between Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg and German Chancellor Angela Merkel earlier this year which was caught on a hot mic. Zuckerberg promised Merkel that he was working on censoring anti-migrant posts.

It subsequently emerged that the German government and Facebook were working with ex-Stasi agent Anetta Kahane to identify “xenophobic” posts made on the social networking website and punish people who make them with fines and jail sentences.

As we highlighted back in January, Facebook’s new censorship policy also allows users to flag content which “annoys” them or which they deem to be offensive. This allows large mobs of agenda-driven social justice warriors to mass flag posts for deletion.

The new policy was justified by Facebook’s need to eliminate “fake news,” but the same excuse doesn’t apply in this case. The story about the refugee gang rape of the Swedish woman was featured in numerous different mainstream news outlets, including The Local and FriaTider.

Facebook has previously censored political content on numerous occasions. Back in May, the winner of the Muhammad art contest in Garland, Texas that was attacked by gun-wielding jihadists was banned by Facebook, before his account was restored after vociferous complaints.

The Alex Jones Facebook account was also temporarily suspended over an image of an ISIS militant that couldn't even be considered offensive by any stretch of the imagination.

As the Gatestone Institute highlights, Facebook is censoring a rape epidemic in Germany that has led citizens to obtain firearms and pepper spray in their droves.

German police are also deliberately censoring information about migrants committing rapes and other crimes so as not to "legitimize" critics of mass immigration.

Swedish Migrant Slits 7 Year Old Girl's Throat

7 Jan 2016

No way she can say he molested her now:

A seven year old girl was stabbed to death in an apartment in Upplands-Bro in northern Stockholm on 25 July this year by a 36 year old man, Daniel Gebru. Ten months earlier Gebru arrived as a welfare of migrant from Eritrea to Sweden.

Gebru has not been able to give any concrete reasons for why he cut the throat of the seven-year girl in the bathroom of her home. He had previously been living in the apartment. What he did there on that day is unclear because according to some data he was not living there anymore. As the Court notes, however, he did live in the apartment when the murder was committed but Gebru had failed to pay rent.

Gebru has stated that he had intended to take his own life but for unknown reasons instead stabbed the girl to death.

Another day, another horror that is so bad I can guarantee you would never see it in any movie. Any director would claim it was overkill – just too evil for plausibility. Any screenwriter who wrote it would be fired for incompetence.

This will be one of the greatest sources of comfort to me, no matter how awful the Apocalypse gets for me personally. I really can't stand this helpless world which lets evil thrive. Whatever the weight to bear, it is hard to believe it could be worse than watching leftists smugly get children like this raped and killed, attack anyone who opposes it with a vengeance as if they are morally superior, and then deny any of the horrors to come were in any way their fault, or even predictable.

I could burn in at the hands of a savage with a grin on my face, if I knew all the leftists I left behind were on the path to being Mussolini'ed.

Bring the Apocalypse.

German Police Identify Suspects After Mass Sexual Assault New Year's Eve

6 January 2016

German police have identified three suspects in connection with mass attacks on women at New Year celebrations in the city of Cologne, the interior minister of the state of North Rhine-Westphalia said on Wednesday.

On Tuesday, police announced that 90 women had been sexually molested, robbed, or threatened outside the city's central cathedral, a series of events they condemned as a "new dimension in crime."

The women who were targeted have begun to come forward publicly. An 18-year-old called Michelle told Germany's N-TV news network that her and her 11 friends had been harassed, groped, and robbed on New Year's Eve.

"At around 11pm we were at the main train station and wanted to travel on to see the fireworks and that was when we first noticed all these men standing around," she said.

"We managed to go into the cathedral and wanted to go past the Museum Ludwig to join everyone and watch the fireworks by the river, but suddenly we were surrounded by a group of between 20 and 30 men."

"They were full of anger, and we had to make sure that none of us were pulled away by them. They were groping us and we were trying to get away as quickly as possible"

A 27-year-old woman called Anne told Spiegel Online: "The entire square was full of almost exclusively men with just a few fearful women among them being stared at. I can hardly describe it. I felt very uncomfortable." She said she was groped soon after arriving.

Another woman identified as Katja, said: "When we came out of the station, we were very surprised by the group we met, which was made up only of foreign men... We walked through the group of men, there was a tunnel through them, we walked through... I was groped everywhere... Although we shouted and hit them, they men didn't stop. I was horrified and I think I was touched around 100 times over the 200 meters."

The area the women were in normally attracts thousand of revelers on New Year's Eve.

Police chief Wolfgang Albers told reporters that assaults were committed by perpetrators from a group which contained as many as 1,000 men who appeared to be between 18 and 35 years old and mainly from "the Arab or North African region."

"We have one complaint that represents a rape," he added.

The attacks have also exacerbated tensions between recently arrived refugees and migrants, and anti-immigration campaigners; Germany took in one million migrants last year.

"We will not tolerate such cowardly and abhorrent attacks," German Justice Minister Heiko Maas said on Tuesday. "This is apparently an entirely new dimension of organized crime." He said everyone involved must be "identified and made accountable."

Ralf Jaeger, interior minister of the state of North Rhine-Westphalia, said: "We will not tolerate organized groups of men from North Africa that abuse defenseless women with brazen sexual attacks," and added: "We owe that to women as well as to those North African refugees who want to live peacefully among us."

Meanwhile, Germany's integration commissioner, Aydan Ozoguz, demanded a rapid investigation, "because on the one hand, the women need clarity and on the other, refugees and foreigners are quickly becoming the focus of broad suspicion."

Cologne mayor Henriette Reker said there was no reason to believe the perpetrators of the attacks were refugees, though what happened was "unbelievable and intolerable."

Reker has faced criticism after suggesting at a crisis meeting on Wednesday that women should follow a "code of conduct" that includes suggestions such as staying an arm's length distance from strangers, asking bystanders for help, reporting assaults to the police, and staying within a group.

German Chancellor Angela Merkel also condemned the attacks, telling Reker in a phone call the attacks deserved a tough response.

"Everything must be done to investigate those responsible as quickly and completely as possible and punish them, regardless of where they are from," she said, according to her spokesman.

After a crisis meeting, Reker announced new steps would be taken to avoid a repeat, including increasing police numbers at big events and installing more security cameras.

She stressed that women must feel safe at traditional carnival celebrations next month when the city closes down for five days of drunken street parades and parties.

Reker herself was stabbed in the neck and seriously hurt in October, just one day before she was elected mayor. Police said that the attack appeared to be motivated by her support for refugees.

On Tuesday evening, around 150 people gathered in front of Cologne's cathedral to protest against violence against women. One of them held a sign saying: "Ms. Merkel where are you? What do you say? This scares us!"

The right-wing Alternative for Germany (AfD), which has gained in polls in part at Merkel's expense thanks to a campaign against refugees, said she should close the border.

"Mrs. Merkel, is Germany 'colorful and cosmopolitan' enough for you after the wave of crimes and sexual attacks?" tweeted AfD chief Frauke Petry.

Meanwhile, there are almost daily attacks on refugee shelters across Germany. "Events like that in Cologne foster xenophobia," said Roland Schaefer, head of Germany's association of towns and localities.

More European Cities report Muslim Sex Attacks of New Year's Eve:

By Pamela Geller
7 January 2016

The news of Muslim sex attacks is being censored, whitewashed, and covered up. In Germany, the attacks were coordinated — that was a New Year's jihad-terror attack.

Finnish police reported Thursday an unusually high level of sexual harassment in Helsinki on New Year's Eve and said they had been tipped off about plans by groups of asylum seekers to sexually harass women.

Helsinki deputy police chief Ilkka Koskimaki told AFP: "There hasn't been this kind of harassment on previous New Year's Eves or other occasions for that matter... This is a completely new phenomenon in Helsinki."

Security guards hired to patrol the city on New Year's Eve told police there had been "widespread sexual harassment" at a central square where around 20,000 people had gathered for celebrations.

Zurich: 'Dark Skinned' Men Molested Six Women on New Year's Eve." AFP, 17 January 2015: At least six women have reported Cologne-style sexual harassment and molestation while celebrating the New Year in Zurich, according to local news sources.

Although information from the Swiss city has been less detailed than what is now known about the rapes, sexual harassment, and theft in German city centers, the victims have apparently reported men who were "dark skinned" to be the perpetrators.

It is not yet known if the Zurich sexual assaults have been committed by recently arrived migrants, as is believed to be the case in Cologne, but the news of the epidemic of sexual attacks now seems widespread across Europe and not simply confined to Germany.

Earlier, Finnish authorities reported that a similar scenario had been seen in Helsinki, citing an unusually high level of sexual harassment.

Helsinki deputy police chief Ilkka Koskimaki told AFP of some of the attacks reported, noting: "Police have... received information about three cases of sexual assault, of which two have been filed as complaints," Helsinki police said in a statement.

“The suspects were asylum seekers. The three were caught and taken into custody on the spot,” Koskimaki told AFP.

Despite public reluctance, and increased parliamentary representation for anti mass migration Swiss People’s Party – which is the largest party in the country – Switzerland still agreed to take 1500 “refugees” as part of a European Union resettlement plan at the tail end of 2015.

The nation has been criticized by the United Nations refugee agency for being too strict on immigration, but the latest news will no doubt vindicate the government’s stance and lead to a further hardening of public sentiment towards migrants.

Reports of Muslim sex mob attacks in Austria, too: New Year’s Eve sex assaults also reported in Finland, Sweden and Austria 8 January 2016

Women in other European cities were the targets of sex attacks on New Year’s Eve, similar to a spate of apparently coordinated sexual assaults on women in Germany.

Police in the western German city of Cologne said they had received 120 criminal complaints by Thursday and quoted witnesses as saying that groups of 20-30 young men “who appeared to be of Arab origin” had surrounded victims, assaulted them and in several cases robbed them on New Year’s Eve.

Similarly Finnish police have revealed an unusually high level of sexual harassment in Helsinki on New Year’s Eve and said they had been tipped off about plans by groups of asylum seekers to sexually harass women.

Swiss police said several women were allegedly robbed and sexually assaulted in Zurich on New Year’s Eve, adding the attack method appeared “a little bit similar” to that used in a spate of assaults in Germany.

And it has now emerged that similar sex attacks were carried out in Austria, but police didn’t publicize the incidents “to protect the privacy of the victims”.

The incidents only came to light after several females came forward to complain to local media.

One identified as Sabrina S (not her real name) told Austrian newspaper Osterreith that she and her friends were attacked by a group of 10-15 men while walking home from a new club in the historic district of Salzburg.

“A friend was grabbed by one of the men and put into a headlock. Her face was in his jacket. He cuddled her and licked her face. She then said that she had no strength to free herself, she was completely at his mercy,” Sabrina said.

SPEAKING OUT Teen victim describes being ‘groped’ by 30 men

It was only after she managed to hit and kick the attacker that her group was able to flee. She claimed to be aware of many other incidents after posting a warning on Facebook.

“Some wrote me that they were greatly distressed at the state bridge, the Makartsteg or the railway station. A girl has even reported it to have been abducted almost New Year’s Eve at the Town Hall by a group,” Sabrina said.

Helsinki deputy police chief Ilkka Koskimaki told AFP: “There hasn’t been this kind of harassment on previous New Year’s Eves or other occasions for that matter ... This is a completely new phenomenon in Helsinki.”

Security guards hired to patrol the city on New Year’s Eve told police there had been “widespread sexual harassment” at a central square where around 20,000 people had gathered for celebrations.

Three sexual assaults allegedly took place at Helsinki’s central railway station on New Year’s Eve, where around 1000 mostly Iraqi asylum seekers had converged.

“Police have ... received information about three cases of sexual assault, of which two have been filed as complaints,” Helsinki police said in a statement.

“The suspects were asylum seekers. The three were caught and taken into custody on the spot,” Koskimaki told AFP.

Police said they had increased their preparedness “to an exceptional level” in Helsinki for New Year’s Eve after being tipped off about possible problems.

“Ahead of New Year’s Eve, the police caught wind of information that asylum seekers in the capital region possibly had similar plans to what the men gathered in Cologne’s railway station have been reported to have had,” police said in a statement.

Koskimaki said police did not see a link between the Cologne and Helsinki incidents.

Shortly before New Year’s Eve, Finnish police also arrested six Iraqis at an asylum residency centre in Kirkkonummi, around 30km west of Helsinki, suspected of “publicly inciting criminal behaviour”. They were released on January 2.

According to Koskimaki, the arrests were linked to the information police received in the run-up to New Year’s Eve.

In November, Finnish authorities said around 10 asylum seekers were suspected of rapes, among the more than 1000 rapes reported to police in 2015.

In Zurich, six women reported being surrounded by “several dark-skinned men”, who had robbed, groped and molested them, police said, adding that this was an unusually high number for Switzerland.

A police statement mentioned the shocking rash of sexual assaults in several Germany cities also on New Year’s Eve.

“It’s a little bit similar,” Zurich police spokesman Marco Cortesi told AFP, stressing though that the scale of the alleged attacks was “difficult to compare.”

Teen victim speaks of horror after being ‘groped’ by 30 men Cologne NYE sex attacks 7 January 2016

An 18-year-old victim of the mass sex attacks in Cologne told how she was “groped” by perverts, as 1000 “African and Arab-looking” men attacked scores of women on New Year’s Eve in Germany.

The teen, named only as Michelle, told how she was surrounded by a group of 30 “angry” men who launched at her and her friends, in attacks that sparked anger about the country’s open door policy for migrants.

The vile assaults, which took place across three German cities, have sparked demonstrations by protesters angered at Chancellor Angela Merkel’s decision to invite immigrants during Europe’s migrant crisis.

National police said the thugs could be linked to a known criminal gang comprising 2000 African men who carry out sexual assaults as a form of distraction before stealing belongings.

As the city’s Carnival approaches, fears are rising there could be another set of attacks.

“At around 11pm we were at the main train station and wanted to travel on to see the fireworks, and that was when we first noticed all these men standing around. We managed to go into the cathedral and wanted to go past the Museum Ludwig to join everyone and watch the fireworks by the river, but suddenly we were surrounded by a group of between 20 and 30 men.

“They were full of anger, and we had to make sure that none of us were pulled away by them. They were groping us and we were trying to get away as quickly as possible.”

She said the gang stole mobile phones from the girls pockets as they tried to escape. Later that evening when Michelle tried to return home, she saw the fireworks being chucked into the crowds.

“It was around 12.30 and we went back to the train station to catch a train that was supposed to go at 1am. But there were so many people around it was really difficult to get to the platform,” she said.

“It was only when I got to the platform that I realized my train was not traveling and I had to go back through the mass of men and walked the five kilometers home by foot.”

Chancellor Merkel — whose open door policy has let in more than a million refugees in the past year — blasted the “repugnant” attacks in Cologne, Hamburg and Stuttgart.

Police said the attacks — which all appeared to have been coordinated at around midnight on New Year’s Eve — represented a “whole new dimension” of crime.

One woman was raped and at least 118 were groped or robbed in a mass attack in the biggest spree in Cologne.

Officials desperate to keep a lid of the powder keg migrant issue have been playing down the incidents for days, insisting there was no evidence that refugees were among the attackers.

But Ms Merkel spoke of her “outrage over these disgusting attacks and sexual assaults” after 300 placard-waving demonstrators demanded action in Cologne on Tuesday.

Anger grew as it was revealed none of the mob who rampaged among revelers near the city’s main station had been arrested.

Ms Merkel called Cologne Mayor Henriette Reker to demand action “to find the perpetrators as quickly and comprehensively as possible and punish them, regardless of their origin or background”.

The chancellor’s spokesman said she had demanded “a tough response from the state”.

But Mayor Reker — who was stabbed in the neck by a far-right fanatic over her welcoming migrant stance — fuelled further fury by astonishingly suggesting the victims may have been partly responsible.

“There is always a possibility to keep a sensible distance — more than an arm’s length,” Ms Reker said.

“People shouldn’t get too close to people who are strangers and who they don’t have a good relationship of trust with.”

Right-wing Alternative for Germany party leader Frauke Petry yesterday branded the attacks “a result of unchecked immigration”.

“Here we see the appalling consequences of catastrophic asylum and migration policies on Germany’s everyday reality,” Ms Petry said.

The German city of Cologne has been branded a “no-go zone” for women by the 18-year-old victim of sex attack carried out by up to 30 men.

The young woman, who was identified only by the name Michelle, told Germany’s N-TV news network that the attackers surrounded her and a group of 11 female friends during last week’s New Year’s Eve celebrations, repeatedly groped them and then stole their belongings.

Police have not yet made any arrests after 90 criminal complaints were filed, including one allegation of rape. It is believed that around 1,000 men, who split into gangs, were involved in the attacks at the city’s train station.

Describing her harrowing ordeal, Michelle was quoted by MailOnline as saying: “At around 11pm we were at the main train station and wanted to travel on to see the fireworks and that was when we first noticed all these men standing around.

“We managed to go into the cathedral and wanted to go past the Museum Ludwig to join everyone and watch the fireworks by the river, but suddenly we were surrounded by a group of between 20 and 30 men,” she reportedly added.

Michelle told N-TV that her terrified friends linked arms for safety, but their attackers were “full of anger” and tried pulling them off in separate directions. When that failed the men began groping the young women and stealing items from their pockets, including mobile phones.

Undeterred by the assault, the young women continued with their evening but later ran into a different group of men firing fireworks at one another near Cologne station. In the crush to get on to the platform Michelle lost her friends and subsequently realized she’d missed her last train. Alone, she then had to make her way back through the crowd of men before walking the three miles home.

The city’s mayor Henriette Rekeroy provoked outrage and accusations of victim-blaming for her comments suggesting women need to be ‘better prepared’ for such incidents. She offered suggestions on how women should behave to avoid similar attacks, including remaining ‘within your own group, and asking bystanders to intervene or to help as a witness’.

It is believed that at least 118 German women have come forward to report being sexually assaulted on New Year’s Eve alone. Incidents were recorded in Hamburg and Stuttgart as well as Cologne.

Victims were largely women in their teens or early 20s with many eyewitnesses alleging the sex attackers were of Middle Eastern or North African appearance. This has fuelled tensions in Germany where many locals blame the assaults on the large number of refugees and migrants to have arrived in the country over the past 12 months.

Protesters took to the streets of Cologne last night, angrily blaming Chancellor Angela Merkel for the sexual assaults by agreeing to allow more than one million asylum seekers into the country in 2015 alone. One female demonstrator was seen holding a sign reading: “Mrs. Merkel, what are you doing? This is scary.”

Cologne’s police chief has admitted failing to access the gravity of the situation in the city but said speculation that the attackers were refugees is “absolutely inadmissible”. Officers are understood to be hunting for up to 1,000 men who may have taken part in the New Year’s Eve assaults.

Ms Reker also told reporters: “It’s completely improper... to link a group that appeared to come from North Africa with the refugees.”

Victims Of 1000-Muslim Gang Rape Drop Bombshell On What Police Are Hiding

“We were completely in panic, hands were touching us all over,” two schoolgirls, aged 16 and 17, were also quoted as saying. “When you pushed one hand away, there was another one suddenly back on the same place. They were grabbing us on our breasts, crotch, and backsides.”

On New Year’s Eve, over 1000 Muslim migrants rang in the holiday by storming through the streets of Cologne, Germany — stealing, assaulting, and raping at least 100 young girls and women. Since the leftist leadership has ordered the mainstream media to keep quiet on the sordid details, victims have come forward to blow the whistle on what the government and police are hiding.

The lapdog media has admitted that German Chancellor Angela Merkel has forced local news outlets to censor reporting of crimes committed by Muslims in an effort to prevent backlash against her liberal agenda to bring in millions of Muslim refugees. Because of this, media giants including the BBC intentionally left out the word “Muslim,” instead substituting with the purposefully vague description “Arab or North African appearance.”

Perhaps fed up with the leftist regime’s desire to protect rapists and thugs over their own citizens, a German teen has come forward with a shocking revelation about the disturbing incident — and it has the left scrambling to cover their tracks.

The Daily Mail reports that 18-year-old Michelle has relinquished her right to anonymity, following sexual assault and robbery by a group of around 30 “angry” migrants. Appearing on German TV, young Michelle dropped a bombshell that completely blows the left’s argument for refugees out of the water.

In her shocking testimony, Michelle revealed that she was surrounded by a group of Muslim men who groped her and her friends, then robbed them and quickly fled. However, the most sinister point was when she disclosed that authorities have been lying about “no-go zones,” and it’s much worse than we thought.

Michelle divulged that the town center is now a “no-go zone,” particularly for women, and that similar areas in Hamburg and Stuttgart are similarly off-limits for non-Muslims and lone females.

She warned viewers that because of the high volume of asylum seekers entering her country, police can no longer guarantee the people’s safety.

There will be no successful investigation, the victims will not be vindicated, and the criminals will go unpunished. The efforts of the police to capture or even identify these 1,000 perpetrators will cost the taxpayers millions, and authorities are already hindered by their inability to even identify Islam or jihad as a motive.

Adding insult to injury, Cologne Mayor Henriette Reker placed the responsibility on women for preventing their own rape, saying that they should “stay at an arm’s length” from strangers. She purposed a “code of conduct” for females, pushing the idea that women need to change their ways in order to not be raped.

Of course, this is exactly the mentality that Muslims want and need to transform a Western country into a Sharia state. Through fear of being attacked, women will begin covering more of their bodies and walking through the streets only in daylight or with a male escort.

Terrorism is defined as “the use of violence and intimidation in the pursuit of political aims.” It is exactly this that the so-called moderate Muslims are using in the West to persuade non-Muslims to change their customs in order to prevent unwanted outcomes.

Muslims have found that they don’t necessarily need bombs, guns, or knives to conform the masses to their will. In fact, they have much better results when using our own freedom and tolerance to inflict their Sharia requirements upon us. There’s no bloodshed needed, no expensive troops and weaponry — only cries of “Islamophobia” and “intolerance.”

Just as Muslim hijacker Mohamed Atta told passengers to “be quiet and you’ll be okay” just before flying the plane into the World Trade Center, moderate Muslims are urging us to comply with Sharia law for “our own safety.” Like cattle, we are being led to our slaughter with the promise of security.

Sex-Mob also rampaged in Austria

7 January 2016

Germany is in a state of shock. Now in Austria as well victims are breaking their silence.

“One guy took my friend in a choke hold. He kissed her and licked her face.” Sabrina S. (name changed) is still in shock (see interview below). On December 26th she and her friends went to visit a new Club in the historic district of Salzburg. On their way home the young women were attacked at around 2 am by a gang of ten to fifteen foreign young men.

Warning on Facebook

The friends sent off a warning via Facebook. “To all girls. Please be very careful, if you’re walking in girl groups or alone in the Salzburg historical district.” The friends didn’t report the incident. “We just were not aware about the bigger picture and greater scope of this attack.”

Robert Holzleitner from the office of the district attorney Salzburg, confirmed: “There are many reports because of sexual attacks.” He did not disclose any detailing numbers.

The Salzburg Police has knowledge of incidents like the one Sabrina S. has experienced. Why are these incidents not reported by the victims? “Those are sex crimes. The protection of victims is very important”, says speaker of the Police Valerie Hillebrand. That there is political pressure to conceal sex crimes committed by young foreigners, is not the case.

Vienna: Another Sex-Mob rioting

Vienna also was affected. One reader reported of incidents on the Calafati Plaza at Silvester night: Young women were groped, harassed and molested by foreign men. According to the police, there are no reports filed.

In Cologne there have been made over 100 reports by victims so far. Yesterday the first three offenders were arrested. Germany is in a state of shock after the attacks were first omitted by the media. The ZDF admitted that it was a mistake, not to report about this topic from the get go.

*Victim Sabine S.: “We were completely at the mercy of these men”

Österreich: What happened that night?

Sabrina: We were on our way from the Griesgasse headed to the Staatsbrücke, when about 15 meters ahead of us, a group of men started to scream and began to walk towards us. Everything went so fast, and we didn’t have any time to react. But we instinctively realized that they were going to cross a red line.

Österreich: Were you hurt?

Sabrina: I wasn’t, I was all the way in the front. But my two friends were held down by the men. They still tried to force the men to leave them alone, but it was to no avail. They were overpowered. One of my friends then was taken into a choke hold, her face disappeared in his jacket. He then started to force kiss her and he licked her face up and down. She said that at that point she didn’t have any strength left to try and free herself, she was completely at his mercy.

Österreich: How did you manage to help them?

Sabrina: I walked towards them and I took the hand of the guy who had my friend in the chokehold, and I just grabbed his hand and pushed it away. She then managed to punch him with her fist right between his legs. But everything went so fast. And our other friend was also being held, though hey didn’t touch her as close as that.

Österreich: Did you call the police?

Sabrina: No, because we just weren’t aware of the full scope of this incident. And we were really shook up. But once we published the whole thing on Facebook, that’s when we finally started to realize that this was a problem much larger and that so many more girls and women were affected by these attacks and went through similar attacks. Many wrote me that they too were being harassed and molested in the same spot, or by the train station or by the Makartsteg. One girl told me, that during the Silvester night she nearly got dragged away by a gang of men in front of the town hall. But some people who were passing by helped her free herself. And anyway, we can't even give a description of the offenders.

Police Report of Cologne New Year's Eve Details Chaos, Overwhelmed Force

Angela Merkel signals willingness to toughen deportation procedures

7 January 2016

Ruth Bender

A detailed account of the mass assaults in Germany's fourth-largest city on New Year's Eve emerged Thursday, drawing a picture of chaos and aggression that left police overstretched and attackers enjoying virtual free rein.

An internal federal police report dated Jan. 4 and seen by The Wall Street Journal described scenes in Cologne of crying women fleeing sexual molestation from crowds of men, passersby trying to rescue young girls from being raped, and groups of intoxicated men throwing bottles and fireworks at a police force no longer in control of the situation.

"Women alone or with others were literally running the gantlet through crowds of heavily drunk men, in a way that defies description," a senior police official in charge that night wrote in the report.

"Our units on the ground couldn't master all the events, assaults and crimes, there were simply too many at the same time," the official wrote.

Critics of the government's open-door refugee policy pointed to the New Year's Eve events in Cologne as evidence that Berlin's massive dispatch of federal police to oversee the transit of refugees at the country's borders had left its cities dangerously vulnerable amid rising concern about organized crime and terrorism.

Cologne tightened security on Wednesday after at least 100 women reported being assaulted, many sexually, during New Year celebrations. Protesters held a peaceful demonstration against violence toward women on Tuesday night. Mark Kelly reports. Image: AFP

A spokesman for the federal police confirmed the veracity of the report but declined to comment further on the events of the night. The report was written by a senior official and is one of several accounts aimed at establishing a full reckoning of what happened that night, he said.

The assaults in Cologne, along with reports of similar events in Stuttgart and Hamburg, have fueled a debate over the security implications of record migration into the country as numerous witnesses and police said the alleged attackers appeared to be from the "Arab or North African area."

In the police report, the official wrote that women reported being sexually assaulted by "groups of men with migration background." On Thursday, it was still unclear if any of the attackers were recently arrived migrants. Police said they had identified 16 young men mainly of "North African" origin who could be among the perpetrators. As of Thursday evening, two of the 16 were being detained, a Cologne police spokeswoman said.

Over one million migrants, mostly from the Middle East, Africa and Afghanistan, entered Germany last year, raising public concerns about how the country would manage to integrate them and official warnings that criminals or extremists could be among the migrants.

Germany remained in shock over the scores of assaults, which became public days after they took place during the New Year celebrations on a popular gathering spot outside Cologne's main train station and near its famous cathedral.

Police said they had no reason to expect such an escalation on New Year's Eve but lamented that they lacked forces to cope with the situation, rejecting sharp criticism from Interior Minister Thomas de Maizière on Wednesday.

"There were by far too few policemen," said Ernst Walter, head of the trade union for federal police. Mr. Walter said federal police couldn't call in reinforcements that night because the emergency reserve units usually on call had been deployed to assist with border controls in Bavaria, the main entry point for migrants coming to Germany.

"We are stretched to our limit and we have terror alerts, migration and mass crimes. That's a huge problem," Mr. Walter said.

Chancellor Angela Merkel sought to deflect criticism by calling for a full investigation of the night's events.

"Women's feeling of complete defenselessness is intolerable, also to me personally. Therefore, it's important that everything that happened gets put on the table," Ms. Merkel said Thursday. She said the government would examine whether enough has been done to facilitate the deportation of asylum seekers who are convicted of crimes; German law currently sets high hurdles for such deportations.

According to the federal police report about the Cologne incidents, police feared serious injuries or even deaths after recording initial reports of attacks against women and as fireworks were being shot into a growing crowd.

With limited resources, however, police focused on clearing the area in front of the train station and, in many cases, couldn't carry out identity checks, register complaints or detain people, the report said.

Groups of aggressive men failed to obey police orders and hindered officers from trying to rescue women under assault by fencing them off behind large groups, the police official added in the report.

"Our forces encountered a lack of respect that I have not seen before.

While it remained unclear if the attackers were recently arrived migrants, prospects of a backlash against refugees and foreigners rose as right-wing groups blamed the incidents on Ms. Merkel's policies.

The anti-Islamic group Patriotic Europeans Against the Islamization of the West, known by its German initials as Pegida, called for a protest on Saturday outside the Cologne cathedral under the slogan "Pegida protects." A counter-protest against far-right movements was also planned, police said.

"A government that can't protect its own people from crimes committed by foreigners has failed and must step down," Michael Diendorf, one of the local Pegida organizers, wrote on Twitter.

Police in Cologne meanwhile bulked up their investigation team with up to 80 officers trying to track down the attackers.

Police said they had identified 16 young men mainly of "North African" origin they believe could be among the perpetrators. As of Thursday evening, two of the 16 were being detained, a Cologne police spokeswoman said.

A total of 121 complaints had been filed in Cologne by Thursday, around three quarters of them for sexual assault, police said.

Arnold Plickert, deputy head of the largest German police union, said police checked the identities of about 70 individuals in and around the square during the night. Among those were some who identified themselves as asylum seekers and police are investigating if they committed any of the reported sexual assaults, he said.

Two teenage girls gang-raped by four 'Syrian nationals' in Germany Reports flood in of sexual assaults against women across Germany as leaked police report states Cologne suspects 'claimed to be Syrian refugees'

By Justin Huggler, Cologne

08 January 2016

Three Syrians have been arrested in southern Germany for the alleged gang rape of two teenage girls on New Year's Eve, as reports flood in of sexual assaults against women across the country.

A 21-year-old man and two 14-year-old boys are being held in Weil am Rhein, a small town near the Swiss and German borders, for the alleged rape of two girls aged 14 and 15.

Prosecutors allege that the two girls were held for several hours and gang-raped after attending a New Year celebration at the home of the 21-year-old man in the nearby village of Friedlingen.

Although the suspects have been in custody for several days, news of the arrests only emerged on Thursday. Prosecutors said they were kept secret to protect the victims' identities

Police are searching for a fourth suspect believed to be the man's 15-year-old brother. None of those involved have been named under German privacy laws.

The suspects are not asylum-seekers. The 21-year-old man and his brother are long-term German residents, while the two 14-year-olds live in Switzerland and the Netherlands.

Prosecutors say they do not believe the incident is connected to the outbreak of sexual assaults against women in Cologne and other German cities over the New Year.

In addition to the more than 120 criminal complaints filed in Cologne, there have been reports of attacks on women across the country.

More than 50 criminal complaints have been filed by women in the northern city of Hamburg, 39 of them for sexual assault.

Witnesses described gangs of men who "hunted" women outside the night clubs of the city's famous Reeperbahn neighbourhood.

"I was alone and suddenly I realised men were handling me," one unnamed victim in the city told Spiegel magazine.

"I pushed away the hands and tried to scream. But when one hand went the next had already come. I felt helpless."

Eleven women filed criminal complaints in Düsseldorf. Police described the incidents as similar to those in nearby Cologne. A group of residents has formed a vigilante group to protect women in the city from further attacks according to the local Rheinische Post newspaper.

In Frankfurt police are investigating seven criminal complaints of sexual assault, including the case of three women who were surrounded by a group of 10 men and "massively" groped.

In the southern city of Stuttgart two 18-year-old women were surrounded and groped by a group of around 15 men. They later discovered their mobile phones had been stolen. Police described the suspects as of "southern or Arab appearance".

In the western city of Bielefeld, witnesses described women being sexually harassed on the streets and in a popular nightclub. Police identified a group of around 150 men of "North African appearance" as the culprits.

It emerged earlier on Thursday that some of those involved in the Cologne assaults claimed to be Syrian refugees, according to a leaked police report.

The outbreak of violence was also far more serious than previously thought, and at one point senior police officers feared "there could have been fatalities".

Two publications have released what they claim is an internal report by a senior officer who was at the scene.

If confirmed, the report could have far-reaching consequences for Angela Merkel's government as it tries to deal with the aftermath of the assaults.

Ministers have said there is no evidence asylum seekers were involved in the violence.

But the leaked police report, published in Bild newspaper and Spiegel, a news magazine, claims that one of those involved told officers: "I am Syrian. You have to treat me kindly. Mrs Merkel invited me."

Another tore up his residence permit before the eyes of police, and told them: "You can't do anything to me, I can get a new one tomorrow."

A local newspaper reported that fifteen asylum-seekers from Syria and Afghanistan were briefly held by police on New Year's Eve in connection with the sex attacks but were released.

The Express newspaper quoted an unnamed police officer who said his squad had detained several people who had "only been in Germany for a few weeks".

"Of these people, 14 were from Syria and one was from Afghanistan. That's the truth. Although it hurts," he said.

The newspaper quoted a second police officer as confirming the 15 who were held had "residence permits for the asylum procedure". Officers took down their names, and they are in the police records, he said.

"Police forces were unable to respond to all the events, assaults and offences. There were just too many at the same time"

If confirmed, the report will add new weight to claims of a police cover-up. The Cologne authorities have claimed they have no evidence whether asylum-seekers were involved.

It is not clear why the suspects were released but police officers have said they were overwhelmed on the night.

Police say they have identified 16 suspects from video recordings of the incidents. It is not known if the group includes any who were detained on New Year's Eve.

Mrs Merkel's critics have been quick to blame the outbreak of sexual assaults and robberies in Cologne and other cities, including Hamburg, Frankfurt and Stuttgart, on the chancellor's unpopular "open-door" refugee policy. Germany registered nearly 1.1 million asylum-seekers last year.

On Thursday, Germany's justice minister warned that asylum-seekers could be deported if they are found to have taken part in the Cologne sexual assaults.

Heiko Maas said in an interview with the Funke newspaper group that "deportations would certainly be conceivable."

He said the law allows for people to be deported during asylum proceedings if they're sentenced to a year or more in prison. "The courts will have to decide on the level of sentences, but that penalty is in principle absolutely possible for sexual offenses," he said.

Bild does not name the author of the police report, but identifies him as the commander of some 100 officers sent as reinforcements to the area outside Cologne's main station on New Year's Eve.

"When we arrived, our vehicles were pelted with firecrackers," the report said. "In the forecourt and on the cathedral steps were a thousand people, mostly males of an immigrant background who were indiscriminately throwing fireworks and bottles into the crowd."

Even the appearance of police did not stop the violence.

"Around 10.45pm, the station forecourt filled with people of an immigrant background. Women literally had to run the gauntlet through the mass of drunk men, in a way you can't describe," the report said.

Police say the suspects are not asylum seekers and they believe the incident is not connected to the sex attacks in Cologne and other German cities.

The 21-year-old suspect and his brother are German residents. The other suspects live in Switzerland and the Netherlands.

Cologne sex attacks:

City's police chief removed from post over violence
Police have been heavily criticized after apparent cover-up over immigrant background of suspects involved in New Year's violence

By Justin Huggler, Cologne
8 January 2016

The Cologne police chief was removed from his post on Friday amid growing public anger at his handling of the sex attacks in the city on New Year's Eve.

Wolfgang Albers was told he was being suspended from duty as allegations continue to mount of a police cover-up of asylum-seekers' involvement in the attacks.

Ralf Jäger, the interior minister of North Rhine-Westphalia state, said his decision to suspend Mr. Albers was "necessary to regain the public's trust".

"The Cologne police now have the vital task of investigating the events of New Year's Eve. People rightly want to know what happened, who the perpetrators were and how such incidents can be prevented in the future," Mr. Jäger said.

Mr Albers said he accepted the minister's decision. "It's part of my job to take responsibility in difficult time," he said. "The facts need to be thoroughly reviewed. The public debate about my person can only obstruct and delay this important work."

The suspended police chief has been accused of seeking to downplay the scale of the attacks after his force issued a press release claiming New Year's Eve was "peaceful" in Cologne.

In fact, police officers had been outnumbered as a crowd of some 1,000 men took over the area around the main station and sexually assaulted scores of women.

More than 170 women have now filed criminal complaints over the incidents, 113 of them for sexual assaults.

Mr Albers has also come under fire after it emerged on Friday that police in nearby Duisburg had offered to send reinforcements to help get the situation under control on New Year's Eve but the Cologne police turned the offer down.

There have been allegations of a cover-up after Mr Albers repeatedly claimed police did not know whether asylum-seekers were among those responsible for the attacks.

Internal police reports leaked to the German press suggest officers were aware many of those involved were asylum-seekers.

Police questioned 71 suspects on New Year's Eve, most of whom showed papers identifying them as asylum-seekers, according to an incident report leaked to several newspapers.

Two suspects were arrested outside the main station and briefly held in connection with the attacks on Friday but later released for lack of evidence.

They were named by Spiegel magazine as Issam D, 16, from Morocco, and Mohammed T, 23, from Tunisia.

Prosecutors refused to comment on allegations that one of them was carrying a handwritten crib sheet with phrases in German and Arabic, including "Great breasts", "I want to f you" and "I'll kill you".

Police denied reports that video footage of assaults on women was found on their mobile phones.

It was officially confirmed for the first time on Friday that asylum-seekers are among suspects wanted in connection with the New Year's Eve violence.

Federal police have identified 31 suspects by name, of whom 18 are asylum-seekers, the German interior ministry said on Friday. They are not suspected of sexual assault, but of physical violence and theft.

The federal police are responsible for area inside the main station but not the side streets where the worst attacks took place. They are carrying out their own investigation in parallel with the Cologne force.

Reports of similar sexual assaults on women during New Year's Eve celebrations are emerging across northern Europe.

In Finland, three asylum-seekers have been arrested over incidents in the capital, Helsinki. Police said they had received information that groups of asylum-seekers planned to harass women in the city.

"This is a completely new phenomenon in Helsinki," Ikka Koskimaki, the deputy police chief, said.

In Sweden, 15 women reported being sexually assaulted in the city of Kalmar on New Year's Eve. Two asylum-seekers have been arrested in connection with the assaults.

In Switzerland, police in Zurich said six women reported being sexually assaulted and robbed in cases "a little similar" to those in Germany.

There have been reports of similar attacks in cities across Germany and in neighbouring Austria.

Cologne New Year sex attacks: Germany's women are angry, scared - and getting tired of excuses

By Justin Huggler, in Cologne
8 January 2016

For German women, 2016 has got off to a shocking start.

Dozens of women trying to see in the New Year in the centre of Cologne found themselves trapped in a crowd of some 1,000 men, who groped them, tore off their underwear, shouted lewd insults and threw fireworks at them.

To make matters worse, a series of sexual assaults that would normally make headline news went almost completely unreported for five days - and the scale of what happened that night in the western German city is only now emerging. As are reports that similar incidents took place in Finnish capital Helsinki, with police saying they were tipped off about plans by groups of asylum seekers to sexually harass women.

Women looking for reassurance from the authorities, therefore, were shocked when Henriette Reker, the mayor of Cologne and a survivor of a far-Right assassination attempt, said that German women should behave according to a certain 'code of conduct'.

"We will publish online guidelines that these young women can read through to prepare themselves."

Mayor Henriette Reker

She made a public announcement advising women to travel in groups and stay at "arm's length" from men they did not know to avoid such attacks happening to them.

This means they should go out and have fun, but they need to be better prepared, especially with the Cologne carnival coming up.

"For this, we will publish online guidelines that these young women can read through to prepare themselves," she said.

Her comments have been condemned and met with accusations of victim blaming by women's rights campaigners.

I am furious. This is INSANITY. End violence against women and this frighteningly prevalent victim-blaming.

To cap it all, a Cologne city councilor - far-Right activist Judith Wolter - has written an open letter declaring the city centre unsafe and a "no-go area" for women.

It may seem alarmist, but this is all highly unusual in a country where women are generally used to a high degree of personal safety. In recent years, the number of rape cases and associated offences in Germany has fallen by around 8 per cent.

In Hamburg, where a series of attacks also took place on New Year's Eve, bouncers warned women not to leave nightclubs because of an increasingly hostile crowd on the streets.

But the warning was so unusual that several women ignored it and were sexually assaulted by those waiting outside.

The reason so many women in Cologne were caught up in the violence was because they believed the area around the main station would be safe.

"I had a knee-length skirt on, and suddenly I felt a hand on my backside under my dress. I turned round immediately and saw a grinning face."

Evelyn, 24

Police have now confirmed that sex attacks took place in three cities: Cologne, Hamburg and Stuttgart. So far around 120 women have come forward, claiming to be victims.

The first accounts are now trickling out of Germany. Witnesses have told newspapers that men were entering bars and clubs, grabbing women's backsides.

One woman only identified as Katia L, 28, told the Cologne tabloid Express that she and three friends were stopped by a group of 'foreign looking men' outside the station.

"Suddenly I felt a hand on my bottom, then on my breasts, then I was groped everywhere. It was horrible. Although we screamed and flailed about, the guys didn't stop. I was beside myself and think that I was touched about 100 times."

Evelyn, 24 and a student from Rheinland-Pfalz, was also at Cologne train station.

As reported in newspaper Bild, she said: "I had a knee-length skirt on, and suddenly I felt a hand on my backside under my dress. I turned round immediately and saw a grinning face."

She fled into the cathedral where she was surrounded again. "The only English they knew was 'Hey Baby'. I was grabbed and held by the arm and it was a nightmare. We were trapped in a mass of people."

Eighteen-year-old Michelle told German television channel N-TV that she was surrounded by a group of 30 men, "who were full of anger, and we had to make sure that none of us were pulled away by them. They were groping us and we were trying to get away as quickly as possible."

Lea Westkamp, 19, added: 'I was surrounded and helpless. I could do nothing. These men were all over me.'

While a series of sexual assaults this serious seems unlikely in the UK, it is equally unlikely that any major British city would have so small a police presence in its centre on New Year's Eve.

Officers in Cologne were overwhelmed by crowds of men. Witnesses described them watching helplessly and one unnamed policeman told Bild newspaper: "If you spoke to a suspect you were immediately surrounded by his friends. It was threatening."

What makes this highly unusual situation even more combustible are police reports that the crowd of attackers was made up of men "of North African or Arab appearance".

There have been allegations of a police cover-up for fear of setting off racial tensions.

"The sexual assaults were barely reported by the German press until five days after they took place."

The sexual assaults were barely reported by the German press until five days after they took place, and a former interior minister has accused the media of observing a "news blackout" and "code of silence" because of the ethnicity of those involved.

At the heart of this is the possibility that the perpetrators may be among the 1.1m asylum-seekers who arrived in Germany last year under Angela Merkel's widely-criticized "open-door" refugee policy - something that's already threatened to rock her seemingly unshakeable Chancellorship.

The government has been quick to announce there is no evidence that refugees were involved. The far-Right was as quick to say that there's no evidence they weren't.

Many German women are now beginning to voice fears that their personal safety is being compromised in the name of political correctness.

On Tuesday night, hundreds of protestors gathered in front of the cathedral in Cologne, demanding for more respect for women.

Female demonstrators waved signs reading: 'Mrs Merkel. What are you doing? This is scary'.

Ms Reker, who only last year was hailed as a heroine after she survived an assassination attempt over her support for refugees, has been widely mocked for her advice to German women in the wake of the assaults.

"It's not women who have to change their behaviour, but the men who are so rough," Manuela Schwesig, the German minister for families, said. "The days in which women couldn't wear miniskirts are over."

"Thomas de Maiziere, the interior minister, has called for asylum-seekers who break the law in Germany to be deported."

"Politically correct excuses just make people angry," Christian Pfeiffer, a leading German criminologist, told Welt newspaper.

"What bothered me in the recent reporting of Cologne was the bland assertion that it wasn't refugees.... This is as if they were afraid of the possibility."

Now, though, the taboo appears to have been broken. Thomas de Maiziere, the interior minister, has called for asylum-seekers who break the law in Germany to be deported.

For the women caught up in Cologne's New Year's Eve catastrophe, it's not the answer and does little to make them less apprehensive about the year ahead.

German Vigilante Groups Pledge To Protect Women In Migrant Sex Assault Cities

Dusseldorf, the neighbouring city to migrant sex attack capital Cologne is the first German city to see a new citizen protection league since the new year's attacks, with thousands signing up to do their part.

Declaring "one for all, and all for one", the motto of Sweden and a saying commonly associated with the Three Musketeers the new 'Dusseldorf is Watching' group already had 2,300 members after it was launched on Facebook last night. The group intends to provide protection at major events and in city centres at weekends to ensure the safety of their fellow Germans, reports the Rheinische Post.

Flowers and a letter reading "One doesn't beat women - not even with flowers" are laid down in front of Cologne's landmark, the Cologne Cathedral, near the main railway station, on January 7, 2016, to commemorate victims of the apparently coordinated sex attacks in the western city during New Year's Eve.

While the desire to “protect our ladies future” appears sincere the group has already come under attack not only by police who maintain law enforcement should remain firmly their own responsibility, but also by the press who have labelled the group “absurd” and criticized it for including members of biker gangs.

A spokesman for Dusseldorf police told local media of the emergence of the vigilante group: “for public security in Germany the police are responsible... deliberately searching for offenders is not a job for the citizen”. He added the police had no problem with individuals acting courageously when confronted with crime, but they were against “self proclaimed vigilantes”.

Yet the group founder insists vigilante justice or any kind of violence are not what the group is about. All they intend to do is be “present and attentive” at major public events and on weekend evenings.

There has not yet been any comparable group established in Cologne itself, which has been described to Breitbart as being one of Germany’s most ‘progressive’ cities. The city elected an independent mayor last year who stood on a platform of pro-migrant policies as she lay in a coma, having been stabbed in the neck the day before the vote by an anti-migrant campaigner.

The Big List Of Muslim Sex Attacks Gets Bigger ‘The idea of multicultural Europe has failed’

Women in at least six countries across Europe are paying the price for their leaders’ decision to welcome millions of migrants from cultures deeply hostile to Western values.

A wave of sexual assaults in Cologne, Germany, on New Year’s Eve – and the media cover-up that followed – enraged local citizens. The backlash grew as it became apparent that similar attacks happened in Bielefeld, Duesseldorf, Frankfurt, Hamburg and Stuttgart.

Over 100 sexual assaults and robberies were perpetrated by Arab and North African migrants last Friday in Cologne, but Germany is not alone.

The list of countries that have reported a spike in sexual attacks since taking in migrants include:

Austria: Police allegedly tried to cover up evidence of sex attacks in Vienna, Breitbart London reported Friday.

Finland: Police told Agence-France Presse there was “widespread sexual harassment” at a New Year’s Eve event where 1,000 asylum seekers congregated.

France: Two Afghan migrants were arrested in connection with an attempted rape on a passenger train in Paris, Le Parisien reported Thursday.

Germany: A police officer in Cologne told Express.de on Thursday that 14 suspects in custody came from Syria; one came from Afghanistan.

Sweden: At least nine women were groped by gangs of migrants in Kalmar.

Switzerland: Six women said they were sexually harassed at a New Year’s Eve event in Zurich, SWI reported Thursday. The attacks were described by the website as “Cologne-style.”

“The idea of multicultural Europe has failed,” Robert Fico, the prime minister of Slovakia, said on Friday, the Telegraph reported. “The migrants cannot be integrated; it’s simply impossible.”

Fico said there was a “clear link” between the sex attacks and the influx of refugees to European nations.

Finnish police echoed what their counterparts in Germany said about crime taking on a wholly different dimension with the arrival of refugees.

“There hasn’t been this kind of harassment on previous New Year’s Eves or other occasions for that matter. This is a completely new phenomenon in Helsinki,” Ilkka Koskimaki, the city’s deputy police chief, told AFP. “The suspects were asylum seekers. The three were caught and taken into custody on the spot.”

Gunnar Norgren, a police officer in Kalmar, Sweden, had an identical assessment when asked about teenage sex-attack victims in his city.

“We have not really had this phenomenon before. Had it been a single report, someone being groped on the dance floor, then yes, they’ve happened, naturally. But ... this is something new,” Norgren said, Expressen reported Wednesday.

Terrorism expert Brigitte Gabriel told WND and Radio America on Friday that Europe’s crisis is a harbinger of America’s future if it follows German Chancellor Angela Merkel’s lead. Germany ushered in 1.1 million migrants from the Middle East and North Africa in 2015.

“This is a preview as to what’s coming into our own nation in the United States, once we start bringing and importing these refugees,” said Gabriel.

Gabriel, a victim of terrorism in Lebanon years ago, is founder of Act for America and author of “They Must Be Stopped: Why We Must Defeat Radical Islam and How We Can Do It.”

“Remember, these refugees are coming from societies that have no respect for women,” she said. “They treat women as property. They treat women as a subject to be used and abused. Men abuse their wives, beat their wives, rape their wives.”

Gabriel continued, “In Islamic countries, there is no such thing as rape because the Qu’ran gives the right to a man to do whatever he wants to his wife because she is his property.”

She said the West is seeing those attitudes clash severely with Western values.

“What we are seeing in Europe is the importation of a culture that is completely opposed to everything we stand for and believe in,” Gabriel said. “It’s a completely different way of thinking. So when these refugees are looking at German women or Finnish women – or any lady – as something to be used, especially if they are infidel women.”

Gabriel said the clash of cultures is getting far worse because European nations did not insist on Muslim assimilation decades ago.

“Europe didn’t make them assimilate,” she said. “They said, ‘OK, we understand. You’re different than we are. We understand that as long as you live in your neighborhoods and your areas, do whatever you want, your own things, your own Shariah courts. We don’t really care as long as you give us cheap labor.’”

“This philosophy is coming back to bite Europe because the Europeans did not pay attention as to how Muslims were not integrating into European societies for the last 20-30 years,” Gabriel said.

She also said this nightmare is coming to the U.S.

“This is a preview of what is coming to any country or society that imports Islamic refugees who come from the Middle East or any other Islamic country,” Gabriel warned.

She said the first thing Western nations must do is enforce their laws.

“We can fight back democratically by enforcing our laws and saying we cannot allow refugees here,” Gabriel said. “We do not know who they are. We cannot vet them. We have no intelligence about them.”

German elites are responding to the wave of sexual assaults by Arabic and North African migrants on New Year’s Eve by cracking down on alleged hate speech on Facebook, Google and Twitter.

Politicians are worried that an environment eerily similar to the 1920s and the rise of the National Socialist German Workers’ Party in the 1920s is forming.

Julia Klöckner, the head of Merkel’s CDU party in the state of Rhineland-Palatinate, called the attacks a wake-up call on Friday.

“I think we really need to take off the blinkers,” she said, the Telegraph reported.

Africans revenge gang-raped 14 year-old Austrian girl, teacher may have ignored screams

By Steve Goode
19 February 2016

18 people are being investigated for taking part in or not reporting a revenge gang-rape on a (now) 15-year old Austrian girl, in a school in the city of Graz, May 2015.

The girl was 14 at the time, when she broke up with one of the students. The student and his 5 friends (5 are from Africa) chased the girl through the school, and she locked herself in a bathroom.

They broke the door down and dragged her though the schoolyard, into the dinner hall, where they stripped her naked and gang-raped her.

Students said they could hear screams “throughout the whole school” and were shocked that teachers ignored them.

The girl was apparently gang-raped on 4 separate occasions, including this one.

The girl was so traumatized that she moved to a different school. It was only then that she reported this crime to a teacher.

One school teacher is suspected of knowing about the gang-rape, but not reporting it.

If it is true that the teacher ignored the screams, it shows just how insane some people are.

Fortunately these people are just a small part of society, and the majority of people find this unacceptable, even if the criminals were Black.

The reason for so much mass immigration, whether legal or illegal, is because certain people in politics and other influential positions want to turn Europe and other White societies minority White.

This is White genocide, because deliberately trying to wipe out a group is classed as genocide, no matter if the methods are non-violent.

“Diversity” and “multiculturalism” are just the code words they give to their White genocide agenda.

Great “Diverse” Britain: Rape Victims Gave Birth to More Than 100 Half-Paki Babies

Teenage girls raped in the Rotherham child sex abuse scandal gave birth to more than 100 babies.

These Pakis were not only enriching our dull and non-diverse little girls with their penises, but also their fine genetic material. Somehow, this never got addressed by the police. Do you people realize that no one is even being punished for this? How is that even possible? How is it possible that the British aren’t rioting, demanding every last stinking Paki filth-bag be sent back to their disgusting homeland?

Mirror:

Scores more children as young as 13 miscarried or were forced to have abortions after attacks by Asian gangs on 1,400 girls.

One victim, who got pregnant TWICE to the same attacker, said: “I was groomed and abused, but the police took no action.”

The vulnerable youngster had an abortion at just 14 when her abuser threatened to have her killed if she gave birth to his baby.

Then he made her pregnant again just six months later – and allowed her to keep her child, but only if she became a Muslim.

Now a mother in her 30s, she told the Sunday Mirror how she was also TWICE failed by police who refused to investigate the attacks on her.

The woman, who we are calling Jane to protect her identity, said: “I know now I was groomed and abused, but back then, I was confused. Now I want to tell my story to help other girls like me. There are so many of us suffering in silence.”

Jane is just one of more than 100 victims who gave birth to their rapists’ babies as 1,400 girls were groomed, abused and raped in the South Yorkshire town from 1997 to 2013.

Muslim migrant, 16, ‘rapes worker at Belgian asylum centre two weeks after attending a course on how to treat Western women’

By Pamela Geller
21 February 2016

Do the European political elites really think that courses like this, and brochures telling migrants not to touch and rape women, are going to work? This Muslim teen behaved this way because he was taught that non-Muslim women, especially those who are not covered head to toe in cloth coffins, exist for his pleasure. To confront that, the European intelligentsia would have to confront Islam. That is not going to happen.

A teenage Afghan immigrant has been charged with raping a female worker at an asylum seekers’ centre in Belgium, authorities said, prompting outrage from anti-immigrant politicians.

The 16-year-old Afghan asylum seeker followed a worker from a catering firm into the basement and raped her at the centre in Menen, near the French border, prosecutors said.

The judge ordered him detained in youth custody until his next hearing.

A spokeswoman for the Red Cross said it was the first time in 25 years such an alleged incident had occurred at one of the organization’s asylum seeker centers in the country.

‘Two weeks ago we gave a course about how to treat women in Flanders and the boy was present there,’ the spokeswoman said.

The allegation feeds into a highly charged debate over immigration in Europe, particularly since authorities in neighbouring Germany accused gangs of migrants of sexually assaulting women in Cologne on New Year’s Eve.

The notice, released on the Belgian Federal Police website warns anyone seeing Salah Abdeslam, should consider him dangerous.

‘I repeat: people who need a course on how to treat women should not be there in the first place,’ Tom Van Grieken, leader of anti-immigrant party Vlaams Belang said on Twitter.

Belgium received 35,476 asylum requests in 2015, more than twice the level of 2014....

Muslims masquerading as teenagers in Swedish asylum centre repeatedly rape 12-year-old boy and film the assault

By Pamela Geller
22 February 2016

“The case is being treated as especially serious by the prosecutor as not only did the rapists film themselves attacking the boy, but they ‘exhibited particular ruthlessness and harshness’.”

This is the savagery that Sweden — and all of Europe — has brought upon itself. And it is only just beginning.

“Young Boy Repeatedly Raped After He Was Billeted With Migrant Men”

By Oliver JJ Lane

Two migrant men masquerading as teenagers are being prosecuted after raping a young child at a Swedish asylum centre, attacking him “ruthlessly” and even filming the assault.

The 12 year old boy was made to share a room with two others, who were said at the time to be 15 years old at the Alvesta asylum centre in Sweden. The child was subjected to at least one attempted rape, and a number of rapes by one of his room mates and another migrant at the centre, which the authorities became aware of in early January.

After police were called it became apparent the men had lied about their age — an increasingly common phenomenon in Europe as child migrants are given greater benefits than adults — and were in fact fully grown migrant males. Prosecuting the case, Emma Berge told the court a dental x-ray proved one of the men was 18 to 19 years old, and the other was certainly over the age of 18.

Investigations into the case have also revealed the raped child was not supposed to be in the home at all, as the building was only licensed to accept migrants in their later teens. Yet he was put into a private room with what they thought were older boys, and the police were not called over an earlier attempted rape.

The case is being treated as especially serious by the prosecutor as not only did the rapists film themselves attacking the boy, but they “exhibited particular ruthlessness and harshness”. As well as being prosecuted for the rapes, the men are suspected under child porn laws for making a recording.

Despite the video recording being held by the police, both men still deny they raped the child....

Europe's new normal? Muslim migrants film rape of male teen 'We are in possession of a video of the assaults'

Douglas Ernst is a staff writer for WND. He formerly wrote for the Washington Times. He also worked at The Heritage Foundation in its Young Leaders Program.

A 19-year-old migrant was gang-raped at a welcome center in Norway in December.

Norway is dealing with yet another gruesome rape perpetrated by newly arriving Muslim migrants.

Authorities have charged four migrants in connection with the gang-rape of a 19-year-old male at a reception center in the city of Vestfold. The incident, which was filmed in December, included three men in their 20s and one in his 40s.

Meanwhile, police are still looking for leads in connection with January's rape of a 3-year-old migrant in the city of Stavanger.

Vestfold's suspects face charges ranging from rape, complicity to rape and cause grievous bodily harm, or complicity to grievous bodily harm.

“We are in possession of a video of the assaults, which the accused have filmed themselves,” Police attorney Lise Dalhaug said Monday, the Express reported. The incident took place at the Oslofjord Convention Center at Brunstad in Vestfold in late December.

Three of the suspects have applied for asylum in Norway. The fourth suspect, arrested last Friday in Stockholm, is a legal resident of Sweden.

“My client has explained to police that he was present at an incident that is under investigation, but he does not acknowledge guilt of the charge against him,” Morten Andreassen, the Swedish suspect's lawyer, said Monday.

Police say the victim knew all four suspects prior to arriving in Norway. They allege the rapes were masterminded by the 40-year-old suspect from Sweden.

Refugee rapists from the Middle East and North Africa first made global headlines after a wave of sexual assaults on New Year's Eve. More than 100 attacks took place across Germany in cities like Bielefeld, Duesseldorf, Cologne, Frankfurt, Hamburg and Stuttgart.

Other European and Scandinavia nations to experience migrant sex-crimes at that time included:

Austria: Police allegedly tried to cover up evidence of sex attacks in Vienna.

Finland: Police told Agence-France Presse there was “widespread sexual harassment” at a New Year's Eve event where 1,000 asylum seekers congregated.

France: Two Afghan migrants were arrested in connection with an attempted rape on a passenger train in Paris.

Sweden: At least nine women were groped by gangs of migrants in Kalmar.

Switzerland: Six women said they were sexually harassed at a New Year's Eve event in Zurich.

“The idea of multicultural Europe has failed,” Robert Fico, the prime minister of Slovakia, said on Jan. 8, the Telegraph reported. “The migrants cannot be integrated; it's simply impossible.”

Belgian officials found themselves dealing with a similar gang-rape scene case in early February. Officials investigating a 14-year-old boy found footage of a girl being sexually assaulted on his cell phone.

Two Belgians and five are Iraqi immigrants were arrested Feb. 3 in connection with the attack, which was filmed in Ostend last November.

“She has nothing to complain about. Women must obey men,” one of the migrants told investigators, Breitbart London reported Feb. 5.

The victim, a 17-year-old Belgian girl, was allegedly plied with alcohol and raped while she was unconscious.

“Rapists won't be given asylum. They will be sent back to Iraq if they are found guilty,” Secretary of State for Asylum and Migration Theo Francken told reporters after the story went viral.

Alexandra Mezher

Swedish social workers were told that an in-house memorial service for one of their murdered peers was forbidden because it might upset Muslim refugees.

Alexandra Mezher, 22, was killed Jan. 25 in Mölndal, Sweden, while trying to break up a fight between two teenagers. The young woman died of stab wounds inflicted by a migrant.

Social workers in Örnköldsvik who could not make the 550-mile drive to Mezher's official memorial service wanted to hold an impromptu ceremony but were denied by the town council.

Roughly 163,000 migrants applied for asylum in the Scandinavian country last year, which made it the highest per capita destination in Europe. The country now seeks to discourage future waves by rejecting 80,000 existing applicants.

"What happened in Mölndal could have happened here. That's how bad it is," social worker Carl Lindahl told SVT Västernorrland Jan. 31. He said a request to fly the Sweden's flag at half-mast was also denied.

Örnköldsvik representative Katarina Jensstad contacted the website and said the council did not want a memorial service in the same building as the unaccompanied minors. A ceremony was eventually held at a nearby church, but social workers were not allowed to leave their shift to attend.

Somali refugee Youssaf Khaliif Nuur, 15, has been charged with Mezher's murder. Authorities may also charge HVB Living Nordic, the woman's employer, with corporate manslaughter for allowing her to work alone.

Sweden, like numerous countries that have taken in migrants from the Middle East and North Africa, has struggled to police rising crime.

"We have to go to work against unrest in the asylum centers which places a much greater demand than might appear outwardly," National Police Commissioner Dan Eliasson told the Express on Jan. 27. "In some places in Sweden this eats significant resources out of the police's capability. From several sources there are reports that staff are poorly prepared to handle violence, threats and conflicts while there are too few security guards."

Eliasson told the website he would need at least 4,100 addition employees to handle the spike in crime. He noted a recent report on asylum centers showing a jump of 148 incidents in 2014 to 322 in 2015.

Sweden's decision to start rejecting asylum seekers from the Middle East will be of little consolation to its law enforcement community — officers say surging crime has already overwhelmed their resources.

Muslim migrants flocked in record numbers to Sweden in 2015, but now the country seeks to discourage future waves by rejecting 80,000 existing applicants. National Police Commissioner Dan Eliasson telegraphed Wednesday that a policy reversal, while welcome news, comes too little, too late.

"We have to go to work against unrest in the asylum centers which places a much greater demand than might appear outwardly," Eliasson told the Express. "In some places in Sweden this eats significant resources out of the police's capability. From several sources there are reports that staff are poorly prepared to handle violence, threats and conflicts while there are too few security guards."

Roughly 163,000 migrants applied for asylum in the Scandinavian country last year, which made it the highest per capita destination in Europe. Eliasson told the website he would need at least 4,100 addition employees to quell the chaos. He noted a recent report on asylum centers showing a jump of 148 incidents in 2014 to 322 in 2015.

"Police do not have the resources to handle all the disturbances at reception centers," the report concluded.

Eliasson's testimony comes in conjunction with a vicious attack on a 22-year-old employee at a reception center.

Alexandra Mezher was stabbed to death in Mölndal on Monday. She was trying to stop a fight that broke out at a youth center, BBC reported Tuesday. A 15-year-old migrant was arrested.

"I believe that there are quite many people in Sweden who feel a lot of concern that there can be more cases of this kind, when Sweden receives so many children and youth, who come alone [to seek asylum]" Prime Minister Stefan Lofven told Radio Sweden on Tuesday, the website reported.

Other countries struggling to cope with increased crime since the arrival of migrants from the Middle East and North Africa include:

Austria: Police allegedly tried to cover up evidence of sex attacks in Vienna.

Finland: Police told Agence-France Presse there was "widespread sexual harassment" at a New Year's Eve event where 1,000 asylum seekers congregated.

France: Two Afghan migrants were arrested in connection with an attempted rape on a passenger train in Paris.

Germany: Over 100 sexual assaults and robberies were perpetrated by Arab and North African migrants in Cologne on New Year's Eve. Similar attacks happened in Bielefeld, Duesseldorf, Frankfurt, Hamburg and Stuttgart.

Switzerland: Six women said they were sexually harassed by migrants at a New Year's Eve event in Zurich. The attacks were described as "Cologne-style."

Adding to the strain on Swedish law enforcement agencies, ironically, will be the nation's plan to expel migrants. The Swedish Migration Agency told CNN on Wednesday that migrants have a de facto veto on the decision to remove them the country.

Charter flights will be booked to shuttle migrants to another destination, but they are allowed to reject the offer, the agency told the network in an email. Those cases will then be referred to police.

We as conservatives get a bad rap when we say Muslims and Islam don't operate under peaceful ideologies. Liberals would argue they do. Well once again, the liberals are proven wrong and unfortunately, what it took was for someone to die in the worst way imaginable.

That may be a bit morbid, but I think it's important to show bleeding heart liberals everything possible to get them to understand.

Here's a shocking and sad story that should be shared everywhere to get the word out. An Italian woman who was hitch hiking from Italy to Israel to promote world peace was raped and murdered by Muslims in Turkey.

The naked body of Giuseppina Pasqualino di Marineo, 33, known as Pippa Bacca, was found in bushes near the northern city of Gebze on Friday

She had said she wanted to show that she could put her trust in the kindness of local people. Turkish police say they have detained a man in connection with the killing. Reports say the man led the police to the body.

Ms di Marineo was hitch-hiking from Milan to Israel and the Palestinian Territories with a fellow artist on their "Brides on Tour" project.

They had separated in Istanbul, planning to reunite in Beirut.

Ms di Marineo was last seen on 31 March in Gebze.

An Italian embassy official told the Associated Press news agency police tracked the man when he put a new SIM card into Ms di Marineo's mobile phone.

Local media identified the suspect only by the initials MK and said he had a previous conviction for theft.

This "refugee crisis" is not just affecting Europe. It is worldwide. Everywhere Muslim migrants think of themselves as entitled to use the "captive of the right hand," i.e., non-Muslim women, for their sexual pleasure. Those who believe that believe in jihad as well, which means this global crisis is only going to get worse.

"Tokyo cops arrest 2 Turks in gang rape of woman"

Tokyo Reporter,
22 February 2016

Thanks to The Religion of Peace

Tokyo Metropolitan Police have arrested two Turkish nationals currently applying for refugee status for allegedly raping a woman in Kita Ward, reports the Sankei Shimbun (Feb. 22).

At approximately 12:30 a.m. on December 27 of last year, Onder Pinarbasi, 22, and a 16-year-old boy allegedly took the woman, aged in her 30s, to a public toilet near JR Akabane Station and sexually assaulted her. The suspects also stole 9,000 yen in cash from the victim.

Pinarbasi, who has been charged with rape and robbery, claims the boy committed both crimes. The boy admits to only [sic] the robbery charge. "I did not force myself upon her," he is quoted by police in denying the rape accusation, according to the Yomiuri Shimbun (Feb. 22).

The incident occurred after the suspects called out the woman, who was visibly drunk at the time, as she was walking home.

The suspects arrived in Japan last year. They applied for refugee status in August and October, telling the Immigration Bureau of Japan that they did not want to return to Turkey due to "problems that exist between relatives."

While their applications were being examined, the suspects received a visa status granting "special permission to stay in Japan."

The suspects became people of interest for the police after an examination of surveillance camera footage taken in the area.

"Migrants Threatened To Cut Throat Of 6-Year-Old Lied about Age To Get Into Classroom"

By Oliver JJ Lane, Breitbart
25 February 2016

Two child migrants arrested in January after a 12-year-old girl was forced to perform sex acts with them are now thought to be adults at least 21 years of age.

The two men who have not been named but are reported to be Iranian citizens were officially 15 and 16-years-old at the time of their arrest four weeks ago. One of the men has now been proved to be "at least 21 years old" through dental examinations, while the second is also thought to be an adult but with no conclusive evidence having yet been brought forward, reports Bild.

The men were admitted to a children's migrant aid centre when they arrived in Dusseldorf last year after they had managed to fool the German government over their true age. Once in the centre they were allowed into the classroom alongside other children from Dusseldorf, and they were able there to gain access to the much younger girl.

She was "compelled and forced into sexual acts" over the course of some days, said the prosecutor. Germany's Express reports a six year old boy who discovered that the girl was being abused was threatened with having his throat cut for telling on the pair.

It was reported at the time of their arrest the abuse had been established after the girl had given testimony and she had undergone a gynaecological investigation, a doctor giving his professional opinion. The girl was moved for "protection" to another facility outside of the city.

The authority responsible for the accommodation and facility have blamed severe overcrowding for the events that allowed the men to attack the girl, with reports stating the city child protection centre is "bursting at the seams". Chief officer for youth services John Horn said of the attack that children are normally segregated by age and sex, but are able to mingle in "common spaces".

The two suspects had always "retreated into corners" and taken precautions to avoid being properly supervised, he said.

Reticence to be seen too much by staff at the centre may be linked just as much to their falsified ages, as to their sexual attacks. That these men were able to masquerade as children is being seen as a "serious blow" to the credibility of Germany's Youth Office, which gave the men a "qualified inspection" and certified them to be "credibly under-age" at the time of their arrival.

Muslim 'Migrants' Molest 12-Year-Old, Vow to Slit 6-Year-Old's Throat

"The two men who have not been named but are reported to be Iranian citizens..." "Refugees" from Iran? But Iran is not involved in a war. European authorities should be deporting people like this, not welcoming them. This is, as I have said many times, not a refugee crisis at all. It is an invasion, a hijrah for the purpose of Islamization. But by the time Europeans in sufficient numbers realize that, it will be too late.

UK: Rotherham, city that covered up Muslim rape gang activity, steps up police patrols against "Islamophobia"

By Robert Spencer
27 February 2016

1,400 British non-Muslim children were gang-raped and brutalized by Muslims in Rotherham, and "several staff described their nervousness about identifying the ethnic origins of perpetrators for fear of being thought as racist; others remembered clear direction from their managers not to do so."

And so it is entirely consistent and understandable that these traitorous fools would be on the job against "Islamophobia."

"Rotherham Police Increase Patrols To Protect Muslims From 'Islamophobia', Acknowledge 'Hate Crime' Is Falling,"

By Liam Deacon, Breitbart
26 February 2016

Whilst acknowledging that 'hate crimes' fell in the town last year, Rotherham Police have promised to increase patrols as they are concerned about potential "Islamophobic attacks" after three Muslim men were convicted of grooming underage girls this week.

During the trial of the three rapists, members of the police were accused of effectively covering for the Muslim grooming gangs, who operated with impunity for over twenty years, by brokering deals with them, passing them drugs and even having sex with their underage victims themselves.

One of the accused officers was related to the three rapist brothers, convicted on Wednesday, and the police watchdog is now examining almost 200 allegedly corrupt Rotherham officers.

However, Chief Superintendent Jason Harwin, the commander of Rotherham's local policing unit, told the Guardian that they would be more vigilant in protecting the local Muslim population against a perceived threat, and would be increasing patrols across the town.

Whilst acknowledging that racially motivated hate crimes had actually fallen in Rotherham over the past twelve months, Mr. Harwin pointed to the murder of a local Muslim man over a year ago as anecdotal evidence of "Islamophobia" in the town.

As the police continue to push this line, it is worth remembering that the Jay Report into the scandal, released last year, concluded that among the primary reasons for the police turning a blind eye to the industrial scale rape were myths of "Islamophobia" and fears of being accused of racism.

Chief Superintendent Harwin said anyone perceived as committing 'hate crime' would be brought to justice.

"While racially motivated recorded crimes in Rotherham are lower than this time last year, we are aware that this is an under-reported issue. This is something we are addressing by working closely with third-party reporting centers and exploring how we can improve our response to this crime," he said.

He added: "We really want victims of hate crime to feel confident in coming forward so if you have been a victim, or know someone who is a victim, please do tell someone, whether that is the police or another agency. We can deal with reports and information in confidence."

"We've got hate crimes throughout the whole town," claimed Muhbeen Hussain of the British Muslim Youth group, adding: "Individuals are being vilified and being made out to look like it's the community hiding something, and that is stirring up hatred and dividing communities."

Last year, Mr. Hussain's organization called for a boycott of South Yorkshire Police, insisting that Muslims in Rotherham have been "demonized" and "scapegoated" and "our women" have been "attacked" since the publication of the Jay Report last year.

Houssein Muhammad Amer

Canada: Senior Imam mocks the Western idea of “marital rape”

Jonathan D. Halevi
26 February 2016

Sheik Houssein Muhammad Amer (رماح دمحم نيسح) is the Imam of Centre Aljris (يمالسإلإرسجلا زكرم) in Laval, Quebec also a member of Quebec council of Imams.

In a lecture at Al-Rawdah Mosque in Montreal (published on September 2, 2015), Imam Houssein Amer mocked the Western idea of “marital rape” and explained the differences between the West and Islam in this regard.

The following are excerpts of Houssein Amer’s speech (originally in Arabic):

“According to the Western view, the woman who is a spouse – her husband is not allowed to force her to have sex with him. It is forbidden. Why? Because, this is her freedom [of choice]. They [the West] were the first to establish the term of “marital rape”. Is it possible that a husband rapes his wife? Yes. He forces her to have sex with him. It is forbidden. Mistake. She may complain. Glory be to Allah.

“At the same time, some of our brothers, the preachers, told a story that happened in Germany. A German brother converted to Islam. His wife remained German [non-Muslim], and she defied him by bringing her lover to the house. Afterwards, the issue developed into a sexual intercourse. He hit her lover. She called the Police. The wife called the Police, told them: my lover has been attacked in my home. As you have rights in home I also have rights in home. When the Police arrived and listened to both sides, the Policeman told him [the husband]: The Law does not ban her, and you cannot ban her from having any sexual activity even with somebody else. Are you upset? Do the same like her. There is no power but in Allah.

“They [the West] made no difference even between the legitimate aspect [sex within marriage] which we have discussed and which serves as a guarantee from the this disease [HIV] and the sex outside marriage, Glory be to Allah, Glory be to Almighty Allah.

“And worse than that, they opened the other issues, such as homosexuality, man with man, woman with woman, and nowadays a man can go with a man to a church and a priest marries them. Some brothers say: let them live in halal [legitimate status]. They live together in contradiction to the [Islamic] Law, Glory be to Allah. I’m saying that the proper moral approach is that there is freedom [of choice] but within the Islamic Law, within the Islamic Law. You are a free-person in your subjugation to Almighty Allah.”

In previous sermon (published on December 31, 2010) Imam Houssein Amer justified the wisdom of wife beating in Islam (“not severely”) as a last resort and as an act of education in case the husband fails to convince his wife to return to the right path of Islam.

Here is an excerpt of Amer’s sermon (originally in Arabic):

“The Prophet [Muhammad], peace be upon him, says: if they [wives] do so, then, [the husbands should] beat them but not severely [Muslim 1218]. Some people argue, when they hear this text, that the Islamic Law permitted wife beating, and other people say, when hearing it, that Islam oppresses the wife by allowing the husband to beat her.”

“My brothers and my loved ones, the beating in Islam is a type of education, and it is said that it is the last resort [literally “the last medicine”, meaning a medicine that is administered after all others failed to cure the illness as it is said in the hadith:] the last medicine is burning [the skin with fire].”

“The West prohibits the beating for the purpose of education and this is the position that was taken there. However, the truth is otherwise. The beating is a type of education... the beating is used after exhausting all effective and successful [possible] solutions and [it turned out that] there is no treatment without it.”

“The Koran referred to the beating in the context of a series of treatment saying: But those [wives] from whom you fear arrogance – [first] advise them; [then if they persist], forsake them in bed; and [finally], strike them. But if they obey you [once more], seek no means against them [Surat An-Nisā, 34].”

“This is the case regarding the wife if you are right, and she should be admonished, her husband should remind her his rights over her and she should return to her Lord Almighty. In case that the admonition and the advice fail in dealing with her, he [the husband] has to abandon the bed, meaning to distance himself from her, to snub her, to avoid touching her to the point that he will not dream on her, and if the estrangement fails the beating [of the wife] is permitted, as the Prophet said: not severe beating.”

Marital rape does not exist in Islam, only in the West

Imam Houssein Amer’s views go in line with the positions expressed in recent years by other senior Imams in Canada:

Abu Ameenah Bilal Philips (Toronto, Ontario): “Men are considered the head of the family and the final decisions are in his hand... her responsibility is to obey him as long as his requests are permissible according to Islamic law... [In] Islam, a woman is obliged to give herself to her husband and he may not be charged with rape... It is true that the Sharee’ah does permit a husband to hit his wife... The Qur’anic verse outlines the procedures which should be followed in the case of a rebellious and unjustly disobedient wife... the intent of this beating is not inflicting pain and punishment but merely to bring the woman back to her senses and re-establish authority in the family.”

Sheikh Musleh Khan (Toronto, Ontario): The husband is the only leader of the family; “the wife should be obedient to her husband at all times” including when he call her to bed; she should “ask her husband permission before leaving the home” and “is obliged to serve her husband.”

Sheikh Ahmed Abdul Kader Kandil (Montreal, Quebec): “The man has a right over his wife also regarding the issue of obedience in the sense that she has to obey him on any matter and particularly when the man calls his wife to bed.”

Imam Shazim Khan (Peterborough, Ontario): “So the Prophet, peace be upon him (PBUH he said): ‘Even in that situation she should not refuse.’ And to refuse, and to refuse to obey her husband in this respect [to respond to his call to have sex] is a major sin in Islam. It is a major sin... If a man calls on his wife to satisfy his desire with her and she refuses for no genuine reason... the angels curse her till the morning... One of the rights of the husband over his wife also is that she should serve him... wife should protect his honour... she stays away from everything that her husband doesn’t like in order to please him...”

Imam Abdi Hersy (Edmonton, Alberta): “The husband has many rights [فوق] no [فوق] his wife... first and foremost, she has to obey you. She has to obey you, ok. He comes with the orders. You have to give orders and she has to obey you... That’s one of the rights of the husband for his wife. So she is going to cook and clean and prepare food... So she has to obey you... And the biggest thing when it comes to obeying your husband, ladies, is when he calls you in the bed stop what you are doing, quit... Obey your husband... The other thing that is a right upon the wife for her husband is she cannot leave the house without his permission...”

“First and foremost, ladies obey husbands... First and foremost, if you order her to pray or to obey Allah... she has no choice but to obey him... if husband calls his wife to his bed and she refuses without any valid excuse... the angels curse her until morning... She has to listen if he orders to restrain herself or refrain from haram [forbidden action]. She wants to do haram [forbidden action], and he says no, she has to obey him with that... if you order to do prayer, do prayers... she has to obey you, she cannot say no.”

Police 'took part in Rotherham child sex abuse and ignored pleas from victims' it is claimed as the IPCC watchdog says it is probing 194 complaints over the scandal

54 police officers named by victims as turning a blind eye to child abuse
Women claim police failed to act whenever they reported local sex gangs

Trial into six abusers heard evidence some officers were part of the ring
Alleged to have raped schoolgirls, shared drugs and tipped off ringmasters

Hassan Ali (pictured) was under investigation accused of being part of the Rotherham sex ring when he died last year. At least 54 police officers are accused of turning a blind eye to the abuse

At least 54 police officers operating in and around Rotherham are accused of turning a blind eye to more than a decade of horrific child abuse by gangs of Asian men.

The Independent Police Complaints Commission (IPCC) is investigating 194 allegations against officers who are said to have ignored the desperate pleas of terrified schoolgirls while they were being repeatedly raped.

Some are even claimed to have been part of the pedophile sex ring.

Victims say at least one constable molested girls. Others are said to have tipped off the grooming gang's gun-toting ringmasters as to when their South Yorkshire colleagues were closing in.

The scale of the investigation came to light in the trial of rapist brothers Arshid, 40, Basharat, 39, and Bannaras Hussain, 36 - three of the first six people convicted yesterday for carrying out a devastating catalogue of abuse on local girls.

The trio - known as Mad Ash, Bash and Bono - targeted 15 vulnerable girls, one aged only 11, over a sixteen year period. They subjected them to brutal rapes and regular beatings after impressing them with their supposed wealth, drugs, guns and cars. Arshid forced one girl to have two abortions before she was 16.

The men were given access to their victims by trusted local foster carer Karen MacGregor, 58, and Shelley Davies, 40.

MacGregor took in girls - all of whom were white - from children's homes in the area, offering them a safe and comfortable living environment in her 'Hansel and Gretel house'.

But once they were in she pimped them out as prostitutes, making them 'earn their keep' by having sex with a succession of men who were often double their age.

The women, along with the brothers' uncle, Qurban Ali, 53, were all found guilty of child sex offences. They will be sentenced at Sheffield Crown Court tomorrow.

According to an independent inquiry by Professor Alexis Jay, more than 1,400 girls were abused in Rotherham from the late 1990s well into the 2000s, predominantly by gangs from the town's Pakistani community.

A National Crime Agency investigation was launched last June. It has identified more than 300 suspects and 9,000 lines of inquiry.

However, it was only during the last two month's trial that size of the probe into alleged police wrongdoing regarding the abuse was brought to light.

Brothers Arshid (left), 40, and Basharat Hussain (middle), 39, were yesterday found guilty of committing multiple rapes and indecent assaults on teenagers in Rotherham. Their younger brother, Bannaras Hussain (right), 36, admitted ten charges - including rape, indecent assault and assault occasioning actual bodily harm

The Hussain brothers' uncle, Qurban Ali (left), 53, was also found guilty of conspiracy to rape. Shelley Davies, (right) 40, was found guilty of conspiracy to procure prostitutes and false imprisonment

The court was told that one officer had sex with under-age girls, handed drugs to the grooming gang and tipped them off when colleagues were hunting for children in their possession. The constable denies the allegation.

Another is said to have helped to broker a deal in which Arshid Hussain returned an abused girl to police on the promise he would not be arrested.

Most of the claims made to the IPCC are similar: that agencies knew what was happening but failed to act.

Since the scandal was uncovered in 2013, the watchdog has received 194 allegations of police misconduct.

The victims - as made apparent during the first trial into the abuse - tend to recount the same story of not being believed or being simply ignored when they reported their perpetrators to South Yorkshire Police.

The police watchdog is now involved in 54 ongoing investigations into 'allegations about how South Yorkshire Police dealt with child sexual exploitation in Rotherham'.

These cover a range of accusations, from a failure to act on reported child sexual exploitation to corruption.

The IPCC said it is undertaking 'ongoing research and analysis work' into the claims made by 41 complainants to date.

Ninety-two of the allegations relate to police officers who have been identified. The other 102 involve as yet unidentified officers.

Of the 54 officers named so far, 26 have been told they are being investigated. The remaining 28 are still being examined.

During the Hussain brothers' trial, one woman spent three days describing how she was repeatedly abused and assaulted from the age of 11.

Karen MacGregor, described in court as a 'mother figure', took in girls from children's homes purporting to give them a safe haven and support - only to then have them abused

She told the jury how she told a detective called Kenneth Dawes about what happened but no action was taken.

She said: 'He used to have sex with girls and he used to take drugs from people and pass them on to Ash.'

The jury was told Pc Dawes was arrested in 2015 and is currently under investigation.

Another police officer who was mentioned in the trial - Pc Hassan Ali - died last year following a road traffic accident in Sheffield.

Pc Ali was told he was under investigation by the IPCC on the day he was killed. The probe followed complaints about his dealings with alleged child sexual exploitation victims.

IPCC deputy chair Rachel Cerfontyne stressed that the watchdog are committed to getting to the bottom of all allegations brought forward from victims.

She said: 'Our investigative work examining allegations about how South Yorkshire Police responded to reported child sexual exploitation in Rotherham continues to expand.

This is complex work dealing with non-recent allegations and involving vulnerable and traumatized victims. We are committed to ensuring the allegations are investigated sensitively and thoroughly.'

South Yorkshire Police are not the only authority engulfed by accusations they let down the vulnerable local girls.

Victims have also pointed the finger at Rotherham Council representatives for a series of failures during their horrific ordeals.

One woman described how a councillor was involved in a deal with Arshid Hussain to return her when she and him went missing.

She told the court the councillor had rung Hussain and arranged for her to be dropped off at a petrol station on the understanding 'he wouldn't get done'.

Another victim, who said she was made to work as a teenage prostitute, told the jury she had proof police and social workers knew that she was being abused by Arshid Hussain in 2000.

She said: 'Why did they leave it 15 years before knocking on my door and saying they knew?'

The tearful mother of one of the victims told the trial how she found an exercise book in which her daughter had recorded heartbreaking details of the abuse to which she was subject.

The woman said the police and social services were not interested in the book and she later burned it.

Some of the women cited distrust of the police as they told the court why they went to the media to tell their stories before they went to the authorities.

One said: 'The only reason the police started this investigation was because The Times printed my story.'

Dr Alan Billings, police and crime commissioner for South Yorkshire, said: 'People weren't listened to the first time around and that was a disgrace and that's the scandal of what happened in South Yorkshire at that time.

I do hope now they realize that this time they would be listened to if they come forward.'

Victim: Trial 'One Of The Hardest Things Ever...But So Worth It'

One victim of the Rotherham gang said going through with the investigation was one of the hardest things she had ever done - but concluded that it was 'so worth it'.

The woman hoped her experience would give others the resolve to come forward and put more child abusers behind bars.

She was just 14 when she was groomed and came to fear for her life at the hands of controlling and violent Arshid Hussain.

He preyed on the teenager after meeting her at a party in the late 1990s, and would wait for her outside school. Soon he was having sex with her, despite knowing her age and being a decade older.

The woman hoped her experience would give others the resolve to come forward and put more child abusers behind bars.

The victim, who cannot be identified but who is referred to as 'Jessica', said: 'It has been 16 years we have waited for this. It has not sunk in yet. This can give me some closure, for me my life starts now. It has been such a mess, I can finally move on.'

The investigation started two-and-a-half years ago and it has been one of the hardest things I have had to do, but it is so worth it. It's an emotional rollercoaster.

I think a lot of people will come forward now, and think 'if they can get justice after nearly two decades, so can I.'

Earlier, Jessica told the BBC: 'Very quickly he started being controlling. I wasn't allowed to do anything without his permission.'

He isolated me from friends and family and it became the only person in my world was him.

He was very violent towards me. There were times when I thought he was going to kill me.'

Iranian citizens? What war zone in Iran are they fleeing? And as they are both over 21, why did they pose as being 15 and 16? Was it just to gain easier access to girls such as the victim in this case?

"Migrants Who Threatened To Cut Throat Of 6-Year-Old Lied About Age To Get Into Classroom"

Muslim Rapist Refugees Slice Up Woman Near Church, Police Have no Response

5 March 2016

Although Nathalie Hager was severely beaten, slashed, and nearly gang raped, police have ignored her phone calls — all because the alleged attackers are Muslim asylum seekers.

A group of Muslim asylum seekers began following a woman who was walking near a Christian church, hoping to brutally gang rape and murder her. However, after the bloodied victim miraculously managed to escape and contact police, their response was just as sickening as the migrant attackers.

With the unending influx of Muslim migrants to Europe, Sweden is considered the "rape capital of the world." The progressive country began opening its borders to refugees, and with it has come a 1,472-percent increase in rape. Instead of resolving the issue, Swedish authorities have widely chosen to ignore the problem — which has only empowered foreign rapists. In fact, one young Swedish woman was so savagely molested and beaten, it's almost unbelievable how both the media and police have handled it.

Friar Tider reports that 29-year-old Nathalie Hager has waived her right to anonymity after police and media have ultimately ignored her horrific attack simply because the alleged attempted rapists are Muslim refugees. Nathalie told FT that she was walking home from a bus stop near a church in Örebro on Tuesday, when a group of foreigners began following her.

"They pushed me down on my stomach and dragged me by my hair up a paved hill and into an alley," she explained. "I have no memories of them hitting me, but I'm bruised in the face. They also cut open my one breast with something that must have been a dull knife or a razor blade, because the wounds are so deep and narrow. I also have big black marks on my arms where they stuck me."

Although Nathalie sustained deep cuts and multiple blows to the head that damaged her memory, she managed to regain consciousness just before the Muslim men could rape her.

"When I came to, I noticed that they had ripped up all my clothes. Somehow I managed to get out of there. I guess I twisted and clawed them, because my hands are blue and black and swollen. I also had blood under my nails that police believe is from scratching."

Nathalie fought her way out, running to the safety of a friend a few blocks away. She told police everything she could remember, including the descriptions of the men. The attackers were all Arabs with a Syriac dialect, which Nathalie was able to identify because of her work with such people. The men were between 30 and 35 years of age, and although they spoke Arabic, she remembers them shouting certain Swedish words.

"It was just dirty words — 'Swedish whore' or 'Swedish slut' and 'pussy.' There were no full sentences. In my opinion they couldn't speak Swedish except for these words, so I suspect they were asylum seekers."

Nathalie believed that the police and media would want every detail, but she has discovered that they are not at all concerned with an investigation. Aside from the initial contact, Nathalie says that the police have refused her phone calls and will not schedule a time to meet with her about fresh injuries that have surfaced and new details she can now recall.

"They sent only on me and in the end I was told that there was someone who could help me now, but I have to wait for the appointment of an officer in charge of this case. I can not get hold of anyone and there is no one who takes hold of to help. During the long time I sat in conversations with various police officers, no one recorded the conversations or showed interest when I named people, including my friend at the bus station who saw the men and most likely can provide good descriptions of them."

Nathalie's attack has also been ignored by the media, from which the only article written reported that the mystery attackers had "torn her jacket and other clothing." Friar Tider even attempted to contact police, but, like Nathalie, they were hastily turned away.

Not only are authorities and media overwhelmed by the increasing incidents of rape and assault, they have become so desensitized by the commonality that they are now indifferent about seeking justice for the victims. Such is the liberal dystopia.

Migrant blames child sex attack on 'cultural differences': Somalian, 34, who tried to kiss girl, 15, on train station platform claimed he misunderstood 'sexual boundaries'

Ali Abdullahi (34) tried to kiss a 15-year-old girl on a station platform

He also lunged at a female passenger on a train journey

Told police he came from conservative culture and misunderstood sexual boundary

But his mitigation was rejected by a judge who gave him community order

6 March 2016

A Somalian migrant molested a child at a train station in a misunderstanding caused by 'cultural differences', a court heard.

Ali Abdullahi (34) tried to kiss a 15-year-old girl on a station platform, lunged at a female passenger on a train journey and made an approach at another woman.

But despite pleading guilty to the attacks, the security guard, who came to Britain in 2011, still has trouble admitting he did anything wrong, the court heard.

He told police he came from a conservative culture and misunderstood the sexual boundary between men and women in the UK.

But his mitigation was rejected by a judge who said the offences could not be put down to cultural differences and were simply sexually motivated at a hearing on Friday.

Abdullahi was given a community order and told to attend a sex offender course to improve his conduct with women following the offences in December 2013.

Exeter Crown Court heard that Abdullahi approached a 15-year-old girl at Torquay train station, Devon, and 'behaved completely inappropriately'.

'She was probably very frightened,' Judge Graham Cottle said.

He added: 'Later that day you approached another slightly older victim who got on the train traveling towards Bristol Temple Meads.

'You behaved completely inappropriately towards her.

'The sex offending was not of the most serious kind but would have been extremely frightening to both girls.'

Abdullahi then approached a third woman, a student, at the station in Bristol. She made no complaint of physical contact but had been left worried by his conversation.

Adrian Chaplin, mitigating, said Abdullahi comes from Somalia but came to Britain via Kenya in 2011, and has a wife who is currently living in Ethiopia.

At the time of the offences he had been tired after a day at work and felt frustrated as he was trying to 'establish a rapport' with the females, Mr. Chaplin said.

He added: 'There is work to be done in terms of him being frank with himself and understanding the different levels of acceptable conduct.

'He comes from a conservative culture in Somalia and misunderstands the extent to which ordinary polite engagement and interaction should or should not be seen as a precursor towards seeking to be physically close to someone.

'It is not the first case of people coming to this country and society and feeling a combination of freedom but not entirely properly understanding boundaries which can lead to a misunderstanding.'

Judge Cottle said if he sent the defendant, of St Pauls, Bristol, to prison, the sentence would be short and he would come out an untreated sex offender.

The Thames Valley Sex Offenders Treatment Programme was a demanding course, he said, and would be part of a three-year community order with supervision.

Editorial Comment

If the judge rejected his mitigation, why did he give him a non-sentence. Judges are allegedly there to protect the public and enforce the law. I doubt the women concerned are pleased with letting him off. Should have been sent to prison and then deported. It is the judge who should get the community order and be forced to resit his law exams, not fit for purpose!

They can't pull the wool over our eyes. They know very well that they would be lashed within an inch of their lives if they did any of these crimes in their own country. But the PC (politically correct) brigade in some northern nations have been giving them classes on European behaviour and this has given the 'out' that they need - i.e. I didn't understand. Deport anyone who commits such a crime and do it now before "we" turn into another Sweden.

Groped between the legs and a firework thrown into a hoodie: Brave female victims reveal the horrifying details after attacks by sex mob of 2000 'North African and Arab' men in Cologne

By Corey Charlton and Imogen Calderwood For Mailonline

Two more Cologne victims describe being sexually assaulted and attacked
One, Jenny, suffered severe burns when a firework was shoved in her hood
Similar attacks also occurred on New Year's Eve in Hamburg and Stuttgart
Police have admitted they fear it was part of a known criminal enterprise
Fear it was a professional gang who sexually assault women as distraction
Cologne town centre has been called a 'no-go area' by its own city council
There are now fears the upcoming carnival will be scene of similar assaults

Boom In Immigration Leads To Heightened Tensions

Cologne, located in the state of North Rhine-Westphalia, is a 2000-year-old city which was first established as an outpost of the Roman Empire.

Throughout the following centuries, its population has steadily increased to now number more than 1million people, with a total of 3million living in the wider area.

The huge population boom is attributed to immigration, much of which comes from Turkey.

Official statistics show that in 2006, just over 30 percent of the population were migrants and 120,000 were Muslim.

However, these figures are likely to have drastically altered in the past two years as waves of migrants from Syria and other conflicts in the Middle East make their way into the country.

Last year alone Cologne welcomed 10,000 migrants into the city.

The exact numbers of the recent influx have not yet been confirmed by official statisticians, but in 2012 - before the worst of the asylum-seeking crisis had begun - migration flows had already risen by a third from the previous year.

This huge migration, which many in Germany fear will over-run existing social systems and infrastructure, has been partly facilitated by Chancellor Angela Merkel's willingness to take in 1million migrants this year alone.

Police fear the violence in Cologne may be linked to a known criminal gang who use sexual assault as a means of distraction, as more than 100 women have so far reported being assaulted.

Two more victims have spoken out today on German TV, after they were sexually assaulted and attacked with fireworks during the city's New Year's Eve celebrations.

One woman, known only as Jenny, suffered serious burns when a firework was shoved into the hood she was wearing.

'I heard a sizzling sound in my hood,' said Jenny. 'I somehow tried to get the firecracker out of the hood. Then it fell into my jacket and burned everything.'

She added: 'The scars will be permanent. I was lucky that it didn't explode.'

Police say the wave of attacks were perpetrated by groups of 'Arab or North African' men in the city centre, in what they described as a 'new dimension in crime'.

Another distressed victim, who did not want to be identified, told Euronews: 'We were fondled, I was groped between my legs. My friends were also fondled. My boyfriend tried to pull me away. There was quite a big group of people, maybe thirty or forty.'

But Cologne's mayor Henriette Reker has insisted that there is no evidence the men involved in the attacks were refugees.

'There are no indications that there are people involved here who have received accommodation here in Cologne as refugees,' she told a press conference.

Police in Dusseldorf, which is 25 miles away from Cologne, are concerned the attacks are linked to a criminal gang comprising of 2,000 North African men, who sexually assault women as a distraction before stealing their possessions.

One of the first victim's to speak out, an 18-year-old named only as Michelle, described being surrounded by a group of 30 'angry' men who groped her and her friends then stole their belongings as they fled.

Witnesses and police have described men working in 'coordinated' groups to grope women who were unable to escape, while two women reported they were raped.

Michelle's shocking testimony comes as the city's own council today admitted its town centre was now a 'no-go area' for women, while it has emerged similar attacks occurred the same night across Hamburg and Stuttgart.

And while German media and authorities stand accused of covering up previous incidents to avoid stoking tensions, there are fears the upcoming carnival celebrations in Cologne will see a repeat of the brazen attacks.

Both Cologne's police chief and Germany's public broadcaster yesterday apologized after they were accused of attempting to cover up the extraordinary attacks.

On New Year's Day police said the celebrations had passed off peacefully with a 'jolly atmosphere'. But then dozens of women said they had been robbed and sexually assaulted during the night.

The victims' testimonies come as protesters angered by authorities' alleged inaction held demonstrations last night.

Michelle told N-TV: There were 11 of us together at the time.

'At around 11pm we were at the main train station and wanted to travel on to see the fireworks, and that was when we first noticed all these men standing around.

'We managed to go into the cathedral and wanted to go past the Museum Ludwig to join everyone and watch the fireworks by the river, but suddenly we were surrounded by a group of between 20 and 30 men.'

Sensing danger, she and her friends then grabbed each other and started holding hands.

'They were full of anger, and we had to make sure that none of us were pulled away by them. They were groping us and we were trying to get away as quickly as possible.'

As they fled and were groped, the men also took the opportunity to rob objects from their pockets, stealing mobile telephones as the teenage girls fled.

Later as they attempted to go home, they noticed how more men were shooting rockets and other fireworks at each other near the train station.

'It was around 12:30 and we went back to the train station to catch a train that was supposed to go at 1am. But there were so many people around it was really difficult to get to the platform.'

She said it was impossible for them to stay together and that her group got separated.

'It was only when I got to the platform that I realized my train was not traveling, as I had to go back through the mass of men and walked the 5 kilometers [3miles] home by foot.'

While police have not yet made any arrests in relation to the sex attacks, they claim to have identified three suspects.

Wolfgang Albers, the head of the city's police, refused to step down despite criticism for failing to arrest a single person over the attacks. Asked why police had claimed the celebrations had passed off peacefully, he said: 'That was wrong. For this we apologise.'

Public TV station ZDF also apologized for being slow to cover the attacks, which were initially only reported in local media.

Ralf Jaeger, Interior Minister of the state of North Rhine-Westphalia (NRW) declined to give further details of the investigation but said he expected 'a very detailed report' this week from the police.

It comes as Cologne city councilor Judith Wolter wrote a letter urging people to avoid the city centre after declaring it unsafe 'for women' in the wake of the attacks.

Mrs Wolter, a council group leader and opposition councilor, also warned the upcoming carnival should be considered equally dangerous.

She wrote: 'The area in and around the central station, the cathedral and the adjoining area towards the banks of the Rhine can be for tourists [and locals] no longer considered - even in normal times - as safe.'

Describing months of petty crime in the area, including drug dealing, robberies and thefts, she warned it should now be classed a 'no-go area'.

'Especially for women, it must be assumed that there is a high security risk here in the evening and night.'

She said the upcoming carnival should be considered a 'similar situation' in which police are unable to guarantee revelers' safety.

The incident has brought tensions - caused by Chancellor Angela Merkel's decision to open her country waves of migrants - to the front of the national debate.

The country took in around one million asylum seekers in 2015, many of them fleeing war-ravaged Syria.

Alarmingly, a spokesman for police in the nearby city of Dusseldorf said officers there have identified more than 2,000 suspects of North African origin in connection with organized theft offences since the start of 2014.

Some of the offences also involved sexual assaults as a means of distracting victims, and Dusseldorf police were cooperating closely with their counterparts in Cologne to examine possible ties to crimes there, spokesman Markus Nieszczeri told The Associated Press.

German police have now admitted that at least two other major cities saw similar incidents.

Bild reported both Hamburg and Stuttgart saw similar attacks - with 118 women across the three cities having now come forward claiming to be victims.

In Hamburg, 27 women have so far filed complaints, of which 10 were sex attacks and 17 dealt with the robbery of purses and telephones.

One witness told the paper more and more foreign men came into a Hamburg club and were grabbing women's backsides.

Local police spokesman Holger Vehren said: 'The information we have so far is that the victims were targeted at the same time by more than one man with a southern or Arabic-looking appearance.'

It also quoted two schoolgirls, aged 17 and 16, who were at a New Year's market.

Describing feeling as though they were being 'hunted', they said they were tripped up and grabbed from behind.

'We were completely in panic, hands were touching us all over. When you pushed one hand away, there was another one suddenly back on the same place. There were grabbing us on our breasts, crotch and backsides.'

In Stuttgart, Bild claimed that around 15 Arabic-looking men had met on the Schlossplatz and, despite the fact that thousands of people were around, had grabbed a group of 18-year-old girls who they groped on the crotch.

The screaming girls had only been rescued when two men stepped in and the attackers ran off, stealing their mobile phones in the process.

In Cologne, an undercover policewoman was reported to be one of those attacked, while police say they expect more victims to come forward.

Last night up to 300 people, according to police estimates, gathered in front of Cologne cathedral calling for more respect for women.

One female demonstrator held a sign reading: 'Mrs. Merkel, what are you doing? This is scary'.

Heiko Maas, Germany's Justice Minister, said the assaults represented 'a new dimension of crime that we will have to get to grips with,' adding that they had appeared to be 'coordinated'.

Asked by a journalist whether refugees were behind the rampage, Maas said police were still working to identify the attackers.

'This is not about where someone is from but what they did,' he said. 'Making an issue out of it, lumping it together with the refugee issue, is nothing but exploitation. Now is the time to determine the facts and then decide on the necessary consequences.'

And Thomas de Maiziere, the Interior Minister, yesterday lashed out at police in the city of Cologne for failing to stop the attacks.

'The police cannot work in this way,' de Maiziere told public TV channel ARD.

Querying why the police cleared the town square before the attacks occurred in the same location, he added he was 'urgently demanding clarification' about the police's purportedly late reaction.

Regarding concerns the men were migrants, he added: 'You cannot draw a general suspicion against refugees from the indications that they were perhaps people who looked North African.'

'A bit of patience is necessary to clear up as completely as possible the structure of the perpetrators and the organizational structures there might have been.'

However, in the wake of the attacks, one of Germany's most powerful politicians and an ally of Angela Merkel has said that uncapped immigration must be stopped.

Horst Seehofer, the Bavarian leader of the Christian Social Union, said that the country should make sure that from now on there was an absolute limit of no more than 200,000 refugees per year into Germany.

He said: 'Speaking from experience of the past, I believe that Germany can probably accommodate between 100,000 and 200,000 asylum seekers from warzones per year.'

'This number we can absorb, and can be integrated. But anything over that in my opinion is too much.'

And he added that refugees who do not have any identification should be turned back at the borders, saying: 'We need to restore the rule of the law in Germany and in Europe. This also means that anybody who travels into Germany must be able to have identification.'

The statement is enormously significant for Merkel as Seehofer is leader of the Christian Social Union, which is only present in Bavaria where it is the partner of the CDU. Together the two parties are known as The Union.

'It was horrible. Although we screamed and flailed about, the guys didn't stop. I was beside myself and think that I was touched about 100 times across around 200 meters [220 yards].'

A woman in her 30s, interviewed on rolling news channel N24, said she was groped by a group of 'Arab-looking men'.

'They didn't look at me aggressively, they seemed more curious than anything, and a little drunk,' she said. 'I was furious.'

According to Bild, a student named Evelyn, 24, from Rheinland-Pfalz, who was at the train station in Cologne, said: 'I had a knee-length skirt on, and suddenly I felt a hand on my backside under my dress. I turned round immediately and saw a grinning face.'

She said that she managed to get to the cathedral and sat on a bench and suddenly she was surrounded by men once again, and had only heard them speaking Arabic.

'The only English they knew was "Hey Baby". I was grabbed and held by the arm and it was a nightmare. We were trapped in a mass of people.'

Lea Westkamp, 19, told a TV station: 'I was surrounded and helpless. I could do nothing. These men were all over me.'

Meanwhile, Cologne mayor Henriette Reker has caused outrage for comments suggesting women need to be 'better prepared' for such incidents.

Instead of calming fears, she caused more upset with her suggestions on how women should behave to avoid similar incidents like remaining 'within your own group, and asking bystanders to intervene or to help as a witness'.

Speaking on live TV, she said women should be 'more protected in the future so these things don't happen again', Breitbart reported.

'This means they should go out and have fun, but they need to be better prepared, especially with the Cologne carnival coming up.

'For this, we will publish online guidelines that these young women can read through to prepare themselves.

'In essence what it contains is the basics that you would expect, for example that women should keep a good distance from strangers and also stay away from large groups of men.'

She added that the code of conduct would soon be available online.

The statement caused a storm of outrage on social media with people asking whether women should now feel guilty for being sexually assaulted if they failed to follow the rules.

Others suggested that banks should avoid bank robberies by keeping armed robbers at arm's length and used the hashtag #eineArmlänge.

Others said such rules would be impossible to control in the carnival that occurs before Lent in Catholic countries like Germany, typically during February or early March.

However, Germany's Family Affairs Minister rebutted with comments reiterating that women in the country should be free to wear miniskirts and to go into whatever areas they wish without fear of sex attacks.

Speaking to local media outlets, Manuel Schwesig, 41, said urgent action was needed to stop the return to a time when women could no longer move around freely and did not have the freedom to wear what they want.

She described events in Cologne, Hamburg and Stuttgart as abhorrent.

She said: 'We need to make clear that the values in Germany include the fact that women need to be treated with respect.

'I don't want to end up once again where we have to debate about what women need to do to avoid incidents like this. Instead we need to change the attitudes of the men.'

Many German politicians are now hardening their stance and speaking publicly about the need to stop the influx of immigrants after it was revealed that most of the men seem to have been either from North Africa or the Arabic world.

CSU-general secretary Andreas Scheuer told the Rheinischen Post that there should be an immediate stop in the influx of immigrants.

He said: 'It is inconceivable and unacceptable that women in the big German cities can be sexually assaulted and robbed in public streets and public places by young migrants.'

Others however warned against overreacting against the news of the sex attacks, such as sociologist Ortwin Renn from the University of Stuttgart.

He said it was wrong to pretend that all immigrants were angels, just as it was to do the opposite.

He pointed out that millions of immigrants celebrated the New Year in a peaceful way, but added that because the sex attacks received media attention they had been given undue prominence and 'more value than they deserved'.

He added: 'There is no more criminality among Arabs or Muslims than anybody else.

'We statisticians say always that there is an equal amount of good and bad in people regardless of their country or their ethnic group.'

However, German media and some public authorities are facing accusations they ignored or covered up simmering problems due to fears it would stoke tensions surrounding the country's immigration policy.

German public broadcaster ZDF has apologized for delays in reporting on the wave of sexual assaults amid accusations of media self-censorship of the inflammatory issue.

The rash of attacks and thefts was only widely covered by national media early this week, after police had initially reported no major incidents.

News editors of ZDF's flagship 'Heute' [Today] evening news programme apologized on social media for not reporting on the incidents at least in its Monday evening bulletin, four days after the attacks.

'The news situation was clear enough. It was a mistake of the 7pm Heute show not to at least report the incidents,' wrote deputy chief editor Elmar Thevessen on the show's Facebook page.

Editors had decided to postpone the news segment to Tuesday, the day Cologne's city hall and police held a crisis meeting on the attacks, he wrote, admitting this was 'a clear misjudgment'.

Meanwhile, Bild, which is the country's biggest selling daily newspaper, has accused officials of ordering a cover-up of the extent of crime carried out by illegal immigrants.

It has published photographs of asylum seekers exchanging money in small packets at the central train station of Frankfurt.

The paper said that all of the officials dealing with the problem had been ordered not to talk about it, as it was a subject which was extremely sensitive and forbidden to be spoken about in an 'offensive manner'.

The reason was to avoid alarming the general public, already concerned about the vast number of asylum seekers being allowed in the country, but also in order to avoid providing material for right-wing extremists.

Former German Interior Minister Hans-Peter Friedrich branded it as a cartel of silence and a blackout of news on his Facebook page, adding that they were now seeing the consequences of uncontrolled immigration which 'can no longer be swept under the carpet'.

Meanwhile police union chiefs have launched a fierce defence of officers, saying the Cologne sex attackers could feel emboldened to carry out new attacks because they have little to fear from the police or the justice system.

'It is highly unlikely that the perpetrators of the Cologne attacks will ever face justice,' said police union chief Rainer Wendt.

If the offenders were not caught, 'they will feel absolutely emboldened to commit such acts again in the shadow of anonymity,' he cautioned.

He said that police lacked the personnel to make effective enquiries, adding that CCTV footage didn't always provide proof of a crime.

The union chief also defended Cologne police from accusations from Interior Minister Thomas de Maizière that they had failed in their duty to protect.

'You can't criticize the police,' he said. 'They simply were unable to continually clear the area with the number of officers they had available.'
